The most novel feature of the clubhouse to the practical automobilist is its private garage. The headquarters are on the ground floor, where the Superintendent has his room. A checker has an office at the big entrance for motor cars, and an exact record is kept of the arrival and departure of every machine. Five of the upper floors are also devoted to garage purposes, affording accommodation for 350 cars. About 75 cars are now stored there, and the visitors enjoyed a regular automobile show, for the cars include some of the finest models of foreign and American machines. The big repair room is on the top floor, and special rooms for chauffeurs are provided on the different floors. Two large elevators capable of carrying four tons each carry the cars to the various floors.

The building has a street frontage of 131 feet. It is 100 feet deep and eight stories in height, built of reinforced concrete and absolutely fireproof. Marble, Indiana limestone, and terra cotta form the chief exterior decorations.

At the annual meeting last night the constitution and by-laws were amended, and the Board of Governors were authorized at their discretion to raise the active membership to 2,000, but this will only be done by gradual installments. The club will continue its policy of holding tests and various forms of competitions from time to time, among the features proposed for this season being a commercial wagon test and a four to six days' endurance run for touring cars.

NEW AUTO ASSOCIATION.

Indpendent Importers Expect to Organize with Twenty Members.

A call will be issued within a few days for a meeting of the American agents and representatives of foreign cars who are not members of the Importers' Salon for the purpose of organizing an association of the independent importers. Paul Lacroix, with half a dozen representatives of foreign cars, has taken the initiative in this new association plan and he believes it will be formed within a short time with from twenty to twenty-five members.

The Importers' Salon, which consists of eight firms, is affiliated with the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, and its members pay royalty upon the cars imported into this country. Mr. Lacroix stated yesterday that the statistics of foreign importations in 1906 showed that 1,402 cars came in, representing about fifty different makes, of which the Salon controlled 20 per cent.

The proposed organization, for which the name Automobile Importers' Union has been suggested, will devote particular attention to making a big exhibit of foreign cars next season in the independent show at the Grand Central Palace. Among the cars eligible to be represented in this new organization are the Panhard, Richard, C. G. V., Bianchi, Berliet, Westinghouse, Delauney-Belleville, Bolice, Brasier, Itala, Martini, Mors, Delahaye, Napier, and Zust.

Want More Autos for Orphans' Day.

A strong effort is being made by the committee of the New York Motor Club in charge of the Orphans' Day automobile outing on June 12 to obtain enough cars to give at least 1,000 children an enjoyable day's entertainment. Requests have been sent to manufacturers, agents, and owners to furnish cars for the run. Thirty-five cars have already been promised, affording capacity for 210 children. The cars are: Stearns, 4; Acrocar, 4; Columbia, 4; Stoddard-Dayton, 4; Berliet, 4; Apperson, 2; Hilde, 2; Premier, 2; Pleice, 2; Rambler, 2; Reo, 2, and 1 each of the Logan, Rochet-Schneider, and White cars. The committee in charge of the affair consists of Samuel A. Milse, R. O. Howell, and William J. Morgan.

J. Schubarik, Treasurer of this Bronx Sports Fishing Club, announces that the club has engaged the auxiliary yacht Cruso for seventeen days, beginning next Tuesday.

The Sunrise Fishing Club has left Clifton, S. I., and the former Shoals. The starting point will be Stapleton, S. I. The club has fished the shoals for the past ten years, and the scarcity of fish made it necessary to change the fishing grounds.

At a recent meeting of the Aeolus Club the following boat officers were elected: Captain, George O'Brien; mate, Tony Schulman; steward, Frank Wall; first assistant steward, Fred Boettcher; second assistant steward, R. Wagner; weighing master, George Geercken, and assistant weighing master, Fred Scheele. The club has chartered the Agnes to start from Canarsie on the following Sundays: May 19, June 9, 23; July 14, 28; Aug. 11, 25; Sept. 8, 29; Oct. 13 27; Nov. 10, and Dec. 8.

King's Cup Coming on Etruria.

The King's Cup, presented to the Jamestown Exposition by King Edward for competition in the yacht races to be held in September at Jamestown, will arrive to-morrow on the steamship Etruria. The cup is in the custody of the United States Express Company, and application will be made at the State Department to allow it to be admitted free of duty, as is the custom with similar trophies. Word was received from Europe with the notification regarding the cup's shipment that Sir Thomas Lipton has also consigned to Jamestown a large number of pictures and bric-a-brac valued at $500,000.

GOLFERS AT GARDEN CITY.

Over sixty golfers, including three ex-National champions—Charles B. Macdonald, H. J. Whigham, and Walter J. Travis—drove off from the first tee yesterday morning on the Garden City links in the opening tournament of the season. Mr. Whigham, the English golfer, who held the American championship in 1896 and 1897, has been seen here very seldom since that time. He was not up to his best form, and failed to return a card. He played in the eighteen-hole qualifying round with Mr. Macdonald, who held the American title in 1895. The prize for the best score of the day was won by the Montclair golfer, Marshall Whitlatch, who, despite the high wind that blew over the course all day, made the excellent record of 88 strokes for the long 6,400 yard course.

The pick of the metropolitan contingent was out, including a number of young players who have captured Southern prizes during the Winter. Harold Sands was one of those who got a place in the first set. He won the Southern Cross Championship Cup at Aiken last month, while L. A. Hamilton, the new Florida champion, qualified for the second cup.

The star contest in the first match-play round for the chief trophy in the afternoon was between Travis and James M. Rhett, the Dyker Meadow champion. It was nip and tuck from the start. On the seventeenth hole Travis was dormie one, and by winning the home hole he took the match by two up. Travers had an easy victory over Bowers by 5 up and 3 to play, while Whitlatch beat C. M. Hall by 6 up and 4 to play. Macdonald also won his round, thus qualifying among the eight survivors for the second round today. Travers will meet A. M. Robbins of St. Andrew's, and Travis will play Harold Sands. Those who qualified for the two cups were:

Marshall Whitlach, Montclair:

WOMEN LED AT FINISH.

Huntsmen Were Outridden in Meadow Brook Run Across Country.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y., April 18.—Lovers of the sport of fox hunting had the best run of the season to-day when about twenty-five members of the Meadow Brook Club and their friends enjoyed an eight-mile run across country behind the drag hounds, during which time about seventy jumps were made. Five ladies were in the saddle and they vied with the men in being first in at the finish, and so well did they ride that the men were soon outridden and the ladies had the field to themselves, and when it came to the finish they had a very pretty race to see who should be first in.

After a spirited dash of a mile, during which five stiff jumps were taken, Miss Gwendolyn Burden outrode the others and finished first.

Saturday will be the last drag hunt of the Spring season, and Master of Hounds Samuel Willetts has arranged a fine line for that day. Among those to finish to-day were Samuel Willetts, E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, Mrs. James Ladenburg, Miss Gwendolyn Burden, Miss Gladys Mills, R. F. Potter, H. E. Drier, F. Kernochan, Jr., J. P. Grace, Beverly Robinson, F. G. Griswold, and W. S. Cameron and the two whips, Davy and Hayden.

TIGERS' CALEDONIAN GAMES.

Juniors Capture the Annual Inter-Class Event with Freshmen Second.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 18.—The thirty-sixth annual Caledonian games of the Princeton Track Athletic Association were held on University Field this afternoon. The games, which are an inter-class contest, were won by the juniors with 40 points; the freshmen took second with 31 points, and the seniors and sophomores finished in the order named, with 29 and 17 points.

A cold wind blew up the home stretch and kept down the time in most of the events. John Elsele, the cross-country Captain, was easily the star of the afternoon, winning the mile and two mile runs in hollow fashion. In the two-mile event he distanced the other competitors so quickly that he ran the race practically unpaced. McCormick, Captain of the football team, bettered his previous record with the shot and is expected to improve as the season progresses.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Dull and Higher—Call Money Rates, 3@1¾ Per Cent.

TRADING AT STANDSTILL

The etory of yesterday's stock market is told briefly in the statement that the total volume of transactions was some 310,000 shares, or half that of the previous day, making ths trading the dullest since October of last year, and that in the final half hour of the day prices were bid up a point or more on the average. The controlling factors in the movement were again the absence of outside buying in any degree whatever, and the diminishing efforts of professional traders to stimulate activity. Such developments as might under happier speculative conditions have exerted some influence upon stocks were discussed on the floor of the Stock Exchange impassionately. These included the earnings statement of the Baltimore & Ohio for the month of March, in which was set forth the heavy loss in gross earnings and a decrease of $870,000 in net, due, according to the road's executive, to unfavorable operating conditions; the declaration of only the usual dividend upon Amalgamated Copper; reports of Southern Pacific borrowing, and another flood of dispiriting news from the Southwest anent the pernicious activity of "green bugs," which promise to create as much anxiety in grain circles as does the "boll-weevil" in cotton circles. The grain markets expressed, through declining prices, relief over the coming of much-wished-for moisture in large areas of the Winter wheat territory, but self-appointed crop experts hastened to point out the short-sightedness of this feeling inasmuch as the "green bugs" were impervious to moisture in any quantity whatever. The stock market closed with these matters under discussion and the trading active at the day's high prices.

Matters of real moment, which attracted little attention on the Stock Exchange, included the submission by the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the British Budget, which contained several provisions of unusual importance and one, at least, of direct influence upon financial markets. This lies in the rebate of 6 cents in the pound sterling which will be allowed on the income tax on earned incomes under $10,000 a year. It is believed that this measure will stimulate investments, and its effect was apparent in some measure in the arbitrage buying here late in the day. Another development of unusual interest was the excellent success which attended the offering of German and Prussian Treasury bills in Berlin, international houses reporting that these issues ross during the course of the day to a premium of only a fraction under a full 1 per cent. Although the Bank of England bettered its reserve position slightly, the Directors evidently considered it the part of prudence to maintain, for a time at least, the prevailing discount rats of 4½ per cent. in view of the Paris takings of gold from London and the unusually low reserve position of the bank itself. Outside discount rates were weaker in both London and Paris, however, and if surface indications are trustworthy, their persistent holding below the bank rates points to an early reduction in these quotations.

In the local money market call rates were a little changed and time money was difficult to lend. The putting out of a substantial amount for nine months at 5¼ per cent. was reported. The banks again gained heavily in their routine operations with the Sub-Treasury, and since Friday have secured from that source some $5,000,000 against $1,700,000 in the same period a week ago. The presence in town of Secretary Cortelyou led to discussion in banking circles of the possibility of an early recall of some part, or all, of the $20,000,000 of special deposits recently made, but no official intimation of the Treasury's course in this respect has been as yet forthcoming.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 18.—Calumet and Hecla gained 5 points, selling at 835 on limited transactions. There appeared to be a large demand for Boston Consolidated during the afternoon, the price advancing 2 points, to 27⅝, closing at the highest point of the day. There was some selling of Amalgamated by the trading element upon declaration of the usual dividend, causing a slight softening in this issue, but outside of this there was absolutely no feature. To-morrow being a local holiday there will be no session of the Boston Stock Exchange until Saturday. Complete list of transactions follows:

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

There has not been such a dull and absolutely stagnant opening in the stock market for months as was witnessed yesterday. Initial trades showed transactions in one hundred share lots and the general comment in brokers' offices was emphatic and to the point. The tape dragged out slowly, recording merely the price, which indicates that the trade is for one hundred shares only. Then three hundred shares appeared and a few more one hundred share lots, after which there was a little animation. This lethargic condition of the opening reveals the nature of the trading and the character of the market. It has been professional for some time and the indications are that there is no hope of anything better than professionalism for some time to come. The customers' rooms in the brokerage houses throughout the district were deserted until almost noon, when force of habit furnished the usual quota of board and tape watchers.

***

Comment on the dullness in the market was varied to some extent by predictions of a sudden revival, which were heard at the headquarters of traders identified with professional operations. "I am not disposed to assume that this passive attitude on the part of the big interests is to be maintained indefinitely," said a trader who has had varied experiences in the market. "How many persons assumed that no market was possible last fall and how many of them within a week became active traders under the inspiration of price movements dominated by the real factors in this game? Unless one can be conclusively informed as to the plans of the speculative hierarchy he has no business taking anything for granted in the stock market."

***

Although no definite suggestion to that effect has been made yet, it is entirely possible that within a comparatively short time some of the money now on special deposit with the National banks may be called in by the Secretary of the Treasury. This refers particularly to the $30,000,000 deposited by Mr. Shaw and which were to have been returned some time ago. The present Secretary extended the time for such return indefinitely, but the continued easy money at this centre and the apparent ease in many other quarters may bring about some definite action on this point. That it has been considered is stated positively, but for the present no one can tell when such action may be taken. The immediate effect of such action is difficult to judge, but it is not likely that it would have any serious effect on the money market.

***

During the recent sharp decline in prices, it was noted that many customers of commission houses were long of the high-priced issues. This seems to have been a result of a comparative analysis of prices, independent of the broker's judgment, by the customer himself. So many stocks had sold at practically prohibitive prices for a long time that when they broke twenty or thirty or forty points they looked extremely attractive. Many traders who would have nothing to do with them at the higher figures bought them readily and not because of the especially good yield on the investment. The crash in prices sent these stocks down twenty points more, and the result is that many traders are hung up with securities which were decidedly a luxury for any one but a wealthy man.

***

Gradually but surely the activity in Government bonds has been lessening. During the last week the trading was concentrated almost entirely with one bank. This institution was a very heavy purchaser of the 2 per cents, but for what purpose is not exactly known. Presumably, the bonds are to be used for circulation purposes. The present price of these bonds makes them attractive as security for circulation. The tax on circulation secured by the Government 2s is only one-half of 1 per cent., in contrast with the 1 per cent. tax on other issues. Taking the price of these bonds at about 104¾, a profit of a little more than 1 per cent. a year can be obtained by the bank on its investment in the bonds for circulation in excess of the amount that might be obtained by lending it over the counter.

Of course there is an extremely technical phase to the circulation of National banks, but the science of the whole affair is to keep the circulation out. That is, to keep it from being returned to Washington, which entails expense in the transmittal of new notes and the necessity of putting out those notes again. Generally it may be stated that banknotes are not available as reserve money, and consequently a bank that gets the notes of another institution hurries them to Washington for redemption. Some banks manage to keep their circulation outstanding for a long time. It is said that one simple expedient is to deposit a block of such circulating notes with a trust company which is willing to make itself useful for a consideration. The trust company can count the banknotes in its reserve, whereas a National bank could not. It is no burden to the trust company; it keeps the circulation outstanding, which is, after all, the point aimed at in the first instance. Equally as good is remitting circulation notes to corporations in the interior or in the mining districts, where they are not likely to be heard from for a long time.

***

Some of the big institutions have specific rules governing the examination of the securities held, and one bank in particular presents a very interesting object lesson in directing Directors on at least two occasions in the year. The assumption, of course, is that this attitude of effective direction is not peculiar to any season, and is, indeed, a regular habit. There is a semi-annual examination of securities by a committee of Directors which is thoroughly effective in determining many things for the directing body itself, and the detail work of which requires the presence of numerous clerks and other assistants.

***

Brokers are usually very careful to live up strictly to the Stock Exchange rules, and one reason for that is, of course, the extreme strictness and severity with which the governing committee enforces its regulations. That committee, however, would have to be composed of master minds versed in extreme subtleties of expression if it were able to formulate a set of rules which could not be violated in spirit, at least, without any possible interference by the Governors. There are scores of offices in the financial district in which men are on the pay roll simply because they control the trade of important customers. They attend to the accounts of these customers, and their value to the houses is determined by the activity of their clients. This is in violation of Stock Exchange rules, inasmuch as the salary paid to these men is really taken from the commissions paid by their clients. If one man controls business of $50,000 a year in commissions, he may get from $10,000 to $20,000 a year. He would not get it only for the customers which he controls.

***

Arbitrage trading is, of course, an established feature of the stock market and its functions are generally understood. This particular kind of trading, however, is not the only one that the cable companies have to take care of, for many houses have clients abroad who trade daily in this market. Some are abroad for pleasure, some are residing abroad for a year or so, and there are some who live abroad entirely who keep up their trading in this market almost as effectively as if they were right here on the ground. Some houses have discretionary orders from their clients and simply notify them as they operate, while others receive specific instruction on every trade. This is a very valuable business for many houses, and at some seasons of the year these transactions for special foreign account figure up a very large total.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

Developments of Yesterday in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 18.—The supplies of money were increased in the market to-day. Discounts were steady. The fact that the Bank of England's rate of discount was not reduced to-day was attributed to the probability that the French bankers will gradually withdraw the $15,000,000 in gold lent to London bankers in the latter part of last year.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was dull and the tone was hesitating, pending the presentation of the budget. In the meantime the disappointment manifested at the non-reduction of the Bank rate cause a slight easing in the prices of first-class securities, but the effect was partly offset by the good Bank return.

Americans failed to attract public attention, owing to the uncertainty regarding the situation in New York, and the trading was confined to professionals, who put prices up to over parity in the forenoon. The New York advices received later depressed the market, but prices recovered and the market closed dull, with prices steady. Home rails and foreigns were lifeless. Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 closed at 101¾.

Bullion amounting to £184,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £30,000 was withdrawn for shipment to South America.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 10.90; Lisbon, 3.

Money, 1½@2 per cent.; rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 3⅜@3½ per cent.; for three months' bills, 3½@3⅝ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes:

Total reserve increased	£660,000
Circulation decreased	222,000
Bullion increased	438,272
Other securities decreased	639,000
Other deposits increased	60,000
Public deposits decreased	57,000
Notes reserve increased	722,000
Government securities unchanged.

The proportion of the Bank's reserve to liability this week is 44.65 per cent., as compared with 43.35 per cent. last week.

Rate of discount unchanged at 4½ per cent.

The rate of discount of the Bank of Bengal was reduced to-day from 9 to 8 per cent.

PARIS, April 18.—Trading on the Bourse to-day was generally dull. Russian imperial 4s were not quoted. Russian bonds of 1904 closed at 405.

Three per cent. rentes, 94f 42½c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 23c for checks.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes:

	Francs.
Notes in circulation decreased	4,750,000
Treasury deposits increased	27,350,000
General deposits decreased	7,675,000
Gold in hand increased	500,000
Silver in hand increased	3,350,000
Bills discounted increased	1,850,000
Advances increased	600,000

BERLIN, April 18.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was quiet and prices were irregular. Americans were depressed. Home Government securities and iron and coal shares improved.

Discount rates—Short bills, 4 per cent; three months' bills, 4½ per cent.

American Writing Paper Up on Report of Favorable Dividend Decision.

SPURT IN SOME COPPERS

An interesting feature of the curb market yesterday was the activity in American Writing Paper preferred, which sold up from 20½ to 23½ on the news from New Jersey that Vice Chancellor Bergen had upheld the action of the Directors in the declaration last October of a 1 per cent. dividend on the preferred stock. The dividend was payable April 1, and was held up pending the action of the courts. Transactions in the stock totaled over 1,000 shares.

In the mining list, Davis-Daly Estate and Boston Copper moved sharply upward under active trading. The former went from 26 to 27⅝, after selling 6,000 shares. Davis-Daly sold 7,950 shares, going up from 13¼ to 14⅞. Butte Coalition gained ¼, closing at 26, after transactions of 500. Nevada-Utah was heavily sold on the downward scale. Transactions of 12,500 sent the price down from 4⅛ to 3¾. Trading in the balance of the mining list was without special interest, and the prices generally moved within narrow limits.

The principal transactions reported yesterday in the outside market, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

RUSH OF STEEL INVESTORS.

Long Line of Stock Purchasers Who Seek Registration.

During business hours of the last two days the demand for the transfer of the stock of the United States Steel Corporation has been so great that there has been a continuous line of clerks in front of the transfer windows of the company in the basement of the Empire building. Yesterday the line extended down the long hall as far as the Trinity Place corner of Rector Street.

All of those who have bought the common stock of the United States Steel Corporation since the books closed for the dividend on March 15 had to wait until Tuesday, when the books were again thrown open for the transfer of stock, to have their purchases registered in their own names. It was said at the offices of the company that there had never before been such numbers of new names to go on the books at one time.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Steady, Fairly Active, Closes at Advance of 4 to 6 Points.

WEATHER IN COTTON STATES.

North Carolina and South Carolina—Showers, followed by fair Friday, colder in the western portions. Saturday, partly cloudy; fresh, variable winds.

Western Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi—Showers and somewhat cooler Friday. Saturday fair; fresh to northerly winds.

Louisiana and Eastern Texas—Fair in northern, showers in southern portion Friday. Saturday, partly cloudy; fresh northerly winds.

Western Texas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Arkansas—Fair Friday. Saturday, partly cloudy.

The cotton market was steadier yesterday and regained part of Wednesday's loss. The close was at a net advance of 4@6 points. Sales were estimated at 150,000 bales.

The opening was steady, at a decline of 1 point on one month, but generally 2@4 points higher, in response to higher cables and large spot sales in the English market.

Exports were about 18,000 bales in excess of port receipts for the day, and so far for the season have been about 7,500,000 bales, against 6,750,000 bales during the big crop year, when the total exports for the season were 8,733,000 bales.

HIS LAST $100 LOST, BETTOR ENDS LIFE

Says, "Be a Comfort to My Mother"—Man Only Known as "J. Richman."

"I lost my last $100 at Benning on Saturday, and there is no chance for me to win again."

A pistol shot was heard in a young Frenchman's room on the seventh floor of the Broadway Central Hotel yesterday morning, and when the door was burst open and his body was discovered the above lines were found in a hastily scribbled note addressed to "My darling Antoinette." The note told the story of his effort to win fortune at the race track, a fortune which Antoinette was to have shared.

It was on the last race at Benning Saturday that the young man staked his remaining hundred-dollar bill. The horse he played ran in the rear of the field. The Frenchman left the track and went to the Broadway Central, where he registered as "J. Richman" of Boston. His only baggage was a small grip containing an extra suit of clothes, a Prayer Book, a pack of cards, and some toilet articles and linen. After he went to his room he evidently began to read a packet of letters, most of them from Antoinette. One was from a relative, apparently, and was addressed to Joseph. The last name had been obliterated, as had all other names in letters which might have afforded a clue to the man's identity. Only "Antoinette B." remained of all the signatures.

From this woman were several poems in English. Most of her letters were in French. Some of the verses were entitled "Love Me," "The Passing of the Year," and "The Two Roses." In her letters Antoinette spoke of love and advised him to be very discreet in all he did. Some of the letters had been burned; others were left upon the table of his room.

He sent for two bottles of champagne and two bottles of beer late Wednesday night, drank them all, and then wrote his last message:

"No doubt, when you read the papers you will learn of my death. I have lost—lost all I possessed. I cannot go to you nor to my home, but I go to Him who made me. 'Twas for you that I left home to make my fortune, but my dream of love is over. Good bye, I will love you in heaven as I have on earth. Good-bye, my love; be a comfort to my mother."

Under this, in larger handwriting, was: "Dear Mother: I leave thee, but no doubt we will meet in heaven." There was no signature, nor was there an address.

This letter was left upon the top of his satchel, where it could not be overlooked by those who entered the room. Before retiring the young man had left a call for 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Although the sound of a shot was heard in the night, no one attempted to enter his room until a bellman rapped in the morning and received no response. He crawled through the transom and found the guest huddled in a corner of the room.

There was a bullet hole in his right temple, and a revolver with one chamber empty lay a few feet away. He had apparently stood in front of the mirror, pulled the trigger, and fell forward against the wall. Coroner Shrady said yesterday that the suicide was about 25 years old, and that he was sure "J. Richman" was not his real name.

BOSTON, April 18.—Inquiry among the various persons named Richman in this city failed to give any clue to the identity of the man who registered as "J. Richman" at a New York hotel and then killed himself by shooting.

HEARING IN HUMMEL CASE.

Arguments Heard in Appeal from Conspiracy Conviction.

Arguments were heard by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday in the appeal of Abraham H. Hummel from the judgment convicting him of conspiracy in the Dodge-Morse divorce suit.

The indictment under which Hummel was convicted charged that he had falsely conspired to maintain a proceeding to set aside a decree of divorce, and alleged that the proceedings were instituted by a perjured affidavit by Charles F. Dodge made under an agreement between him and Hummel.

It was declared by Hummel's attorney that Dodge failed to testify to facts necessary to establish the guilt of the defendant, and that his testimony was without corroboration. The trial Justice erred in his charge to the jury when he declared, as a matter of law, there was evidence tending to corroborate Dodge.

The People were represented by Assistant District Attorney Robert C. Taylor. He contended that the evidence of the prosecution was wholly uncontradicted. There was only one question in the case, declared the Assistant District Attorney. Did Hummel know whether or not Dodge was committing perjury? Was there guilty knowledge? The evidence in the case abundantly proved that Hummel was guilty even if Dodge's testimony had been eliminated.

John B. Stanchfield argued the appeal for Hummel. Decision was reserved.

BIG STORE FOR BROOKLYN.

$1,000,000 Corporation Formed to Build It.

Papers were filed yesterday with the Secretary of State at Albany for the formation of a corporation to open in Brooklyn a large department store with a capital of $1,000,000. The incorporators are Ralph Leininger, J. A. Kohner, and George D. Beattys.

Mr. Leininger is one of the largest real estate operators in the borough. He is President of the Kingston Realty Company. Mr. Kohner, who for years was President of Journeay & Burnham's, is a member of numerous society and business organizations. Recently he was elected to the local School Board. Mr. Beattys is an attorney representing large New York interests. He lives in Brooklyn, but his offices are at 49 Wall Street, Manhattan.

Mr. Kohner said yesterday: "The department store that we intend opening in this borough will be one that Brooklyn's citizens will be proud of, for no money will be spared in the construction of the building, the maintenance of the store, the quality and completeness of the stock. The store will be on a par with the best in the country. As soon as our plans are matured the public will be informed."

MANY POLICEMEN PENALIZED.

Deputy Commissioner Hanson to Recommend Dismissals from Force.

Among the policemen who were before Third Deputy Commissioner Hanson yesterday on charges was William J. Flannery, a patrolman of the East Twenty-second Street Station, who has been on the force only three weeks. He was charged with being off post in an office for forty minutes on April 4.

Hanson said that Flannery would do better truck driving than doing police work, and that he would recommend that he be dismissed from the force absolutely.

Capt. James F. Thompson of the Tenderloin Station, five Roundsmen, and nineteen patrolmen were on trial for not knowing that there was an excavation in the sidewalk at Madison Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street from Feb. 7 to March 22 without a permit. Nearly all of them were fined or otherwise penalized.

Detective Sergt. Lawrence J. Collins was on trial because after shadowing a woman on April 1 to Hoboken he left her to shadow a man whom she met. He said he had understood that he was to shadow her until she had "connected."

"You are so stupid," railed Deputy Hanson, "that you ought to be ashamed of yourself. A little schoolboy could do better work than this. I will fine you thirty days' pay."

Theodore P. Trayor, a patrolman, was charged with presenting a Detective Sergeant's shield at the Grand Central Subway Station for passage. The Commissioner will recommend his dismissal from the force.

Patrolman John J. Donahue of the Madison Street Police Station, who had been tardy over an hour at roll call on April 3, was penalized an extra patrol duty. Mr. Hannon said he would recommend the dismissal of Patrolmen Walsh and Arthur of the Leonard Street Station because it was charged that they had been found in a saloon while supposed to be on duty, and the dismissal of Patrolman Herman Lohn of the Madison Street Station for being off post for thirty minutes on April 4.

A quantity of benzine in the building spread the flames rapidly, and a panic ensued among the employes, thirty women and ten men. A number of them jumped from windows, and six women who had made their way to a fire escape on the third floor also leaped.

BINGHAM DENIES ROW WITH MAYOR

Promises to Begin Shake-Up of the Police Department This Morning.

TRYING TO SAVE McCLUSKY

McClellan Said to Have Warned Police Commissioner Not to Drop Him.

A certified copy of the police bill is expected to be on Commissioner Bingham's desk this morning, and then action will begin. The Commissioner said so yesterday. He had given it out that he would consult with his "Chief, the Mayor," before he took action. But he has already seen his "Chief."

The Mayor and the Commissioner talked it all over in the Mayor's office on Wednesday afternoon. It is taken for granted that the schedule of the coming shake-up is already made out. The Commissioner was told yesterday that an eavesdropper had heard him and the Mayor quarreling at their interview, and that they had squabbled over the reducing of Inspector McClusky, the Mayor defending McClusky on the ground that he had helped him out when he needed it.

The eavesdropper's report of the alleged stormy interview continued like this:

Mayor McClellan: "I don't think I would disturb McClusky."

Mayor McClellan: "There are reasons why I want Inspector McClusky to remain in the position he now occupies."

Gen. Bingham: "If I can't run this Police Department like I want to, somebody else can come in and do it."

The report goes on to say that the Mayor calmly said that if Gen. Bingham didn't like his job he could get out as soon as he wanted to. A newspaper man told the Commissioner he had been looking worried all day. District Attorney Jerome had been closeted with him for a half hour or more and had evidently brought him a copy of the afternoon paper containing the story of the alleged quarrel. The Commissioner took up the points one by one.

"My interview with the Mayor yesterday," he said, "was quite peaceful and altogether satisfactory to me. The Mayor's statement printed in this morning's papers to the effect that he had made no recommendations except as to the keeping of two men in his office was entirely correct.

"The man who says he overheard the Mayor and I quarreling, and that we said any of the things printed here is a liar, and he knows it. I am tired, and perhaps that is the reason I look worried. And the reason I am tired is that since yesterday afternoon I have been doing my work and that of Secretary Slattery, who is sick with tonsilitis.

"Mr. Jerome stayed with me quite a while. He dropped in to see me a moment, and when he started to leave I asked him to stay and chat with me a while. He is a fine talker, and a chat with him is absolutely restful. He is a good friend of mine. He stayed half an hour.

"So, there you are, boys. This eavesdropper has got his dates mixed. He is away off."

The Commissioner was asked how the Mayor would go about getting rid of a Police Commissioner. He said that so far as he understood it, the Mayor or the Governor could fire him by telephone if they so desired. He was asked if his resignation was in the hands of the Mayor already, along with that of every other man who had served in that office. He said he wouldn't answer that.

"Are you receiving any applications from the outside to enter the Detective Bureau?" he was asked.

"About a bundred a minute," he replied.

"Have any Inspectors resigned?"

"They have not."

The Commissioner said he was not worrying about the story that some of the Inspectors had combined to fight the new police bill in the courts if he reduced them to do a Captain's work. There doesn't seem to be much substance to the report. Grant & Rous, lawyers of 99 Nassau Street, said that they had been approached by several Inspectors to know what redress they might have in case it was deemed advisable to fight the law. But they had not been retained to fight any case.

The general sentiment among the nineteen Inspectors seems to be against going into the courts. If they are reduced in title, they will continue to get $3,500 for doing work that other Captains do for $2,750. Some of them say they will make no complaint if they are forced to do a Captain's work on an Inspector's pay.

The Commissioner said yesterday that new shields would be provided for the Sergeants and Lieutenants, and that while he was about it he proposed to change the general design of the shield that is now being used. There would also be some minor changes as to the stripes of the officers under Captains.

The mind that started the story of the quarrel between the Commissioner and the Mayor yesterday went through this course of arguing:

"McClellan knew he would have to use a man like Bingham to get passed a police bill with which he could whip his enemies. He knew he could not use Bingham for that purpose. Now that the bill is passed, McClellan wants to get rid of the Commissioner. McClellan knew that Bingham holds that McClusky is worthless, and yet McClusky is a friend to McCarren and other anti-Murphy moguls. By forcing the McClusky issue the Mayor could kick out Bingham on a good excuse, and at the same time strike a blow for McCarren et al. Inspector O'Brien would be a ductile Commissioner. Quod erat demonstrandum."

ELLIS ISLAND CONGESTED.

New Record Established for Immigration to This Port.

The flood of immigration which has been pouring through this port since the coming of Spring, reached such proportions yesterday, that there was much congestion on Ellis Island. Yesterday morning 9,874 immigrants were waiting at the station at Ellis Island to be inspected. The total for the two days was 16,121 immigrants. Added to this are 2,779 first and second cabin passengers, though these do not pass through Ellis Island.

The immigration officials say that these figures make a new record for the department. The table shows the ships and number of passengers each brought here:

WAR ON HIDDEN DIRKS PROVING A SUCCESS

POLICE MAKE NEW ARRESTS

Crusade Against the Carrying of Concealed Weapons Also Spreads to Tenderloin.

The crusade against Sicilians and other Italians who carry concealed weapons resulting from the slaying of two patrolmen last Sunday, continued yesterday, though there was a diminishing number of arrests. So much has been printed in the American and Italian newspapers about the severity that would be visited upon offenders, and the police and the Judges have been so energetic in the weapon hunt that certain districts of New York are more disarmed now than they have been in a long time, the detectives assert.

Those interested in a permanent abatement of the menace of weapon carrying hope that the crusade will not die out after a little spurt. Old policemen point out that after a week or so most of those who now leave their pistols and dirks at home will probably put them on again.

There are fifty cases of carrying concealed weapons already on the calendar of the Grand Jury, and eight of them were considered yesterday. An equal number of indictments were handed down to Judge O'Sullivan, in Part I. of General Sessions.

All of the men indicted were Italians, and all of them were released on bail, though bail in some instances was $2,000 and $3,000. It is reported that the Grand Jury will devote a good part of the remainder of the week to considering these weapon cases.

Magistrate House yesterday kept his word as to increasing the bail of these prisoners. Six Italians were held in $3,000 bail each for carrying loaded pistols. All of them were sent to the Tombs. He announced through the interpreter, so that the friends of the Italians could hear it, that to-day he would fix the bail of prisoners charged with carrying knives and dirks at $5,000, and that of prisoners charged with carrying loaded pistols at $4,000.

In Special Sessions yesterday Justice Olmsted said that it was the intention of the court to inflict increasingly heavy penalties on such prisoners as they were brought in from day to day. This announcement was made after three Italians had been sent to the workhouse for sixty days for carrying loaded pistols without permits.

The same court sent Andrew McKay, 19 years old, of 227 East 105th Street, to the penitentiary for one year. When arrested for violating a parole he had on his person two loaded pistols and a jimmy. He had been formerly paroled after a charge of petty larceny.

In a descent on 108 Mulberry Street yesterday Detective Petrosino, who is at the head of the crusade against the Italians, got into a fight with an Italian whom he arrested on the charge of murder. Petrosino believed that his prisoner was Enrico Aisano, who is wanted for the murder of Andrea Cuocolo in Naples.

The police of the Tenderloin stations have been instructed to press the search for weapons in their districts. Tenderloin policemen say that in the Black Belt enough razors and bulldog pistols could have been found a week ago to load a freight car. They are left at home now by the negroes.

The crusade has swept from the Bronx to Staten Island. Two Italians were before the Court of Special Sessions in Staten Island yesterday. When the Justices heard that the prisoners had been arrested for shooting at one another at Rosebank, they at once decided to send them to the penitentiary for six months. The Justices said that the best way they could see to put an end to the concealed weapon menace was to send every prisoner to jail, a fine being too mild a punishment.

HIS WIFE OR HIS AUTO?

James Webb Asked in Court for Larger Allmony.

Should a man pay more for the keep of his automobile than for the support of his wife? This question was propounded to Magistrate Furlong in the Gates Avenue Court, Brooklyn, yesterday. It was asked by Mrs. James Webb, the wife of a Fulton Street restaurant keeper, and was an outcome of a telephone romance.

Before her marriage Mrs. Webb was employed as an operator in the Bedford Telephone Exchange. Mr. Webb had a phonograph in his restaurant, and in order that the girls at the Exchange might enjoy the music it ground out he left open the telephone receiver in the restaurant. Because she listened to the music the present Mrs. Webb was suspended. She went to Mr. Webb to have him intercede for her, and the restaurant man fell in love with her at first sight. Some months later they were married.

Yesterday Mrs. Webb alleged that her husband had agreed to pay her $8 a week for her support, but had cut the amount down to $5. It cost him more than that for the keep of his automobile in an Albany Avenue garage, she said. Mrs. Webb wanted to know if she was not entitled to as big an allowance as the automobile. The Magistrate said he would think the matter over.

THINK HE ROBBED WALKER.

Alleged Wire Tapper Held for Swindling Absconding Banker.

On suspicion of knowing something about the wire tapping swindle in which William F. Walker, the absconding bank treasurer of New Britain, Conn., was said to have lost $105,000, Charles Earle of 21 West Ninety-ninth Street, was arrested at 106th Street and Broadway late yesterday afternoon by Detectives Jackson and Collins of Inspector McLaughlin's staff.

Detective Jackson asserts that Earle is also wanted in Chicago on a wire tapping charge. The New Britain authorities were notified of Earle's arrest.

AHEARN HEARING ON WITHOUT HIM

And the Borough President's Lawyer Is Not Allowed to Examine Witnesses.

HOLES IN CITY'S STREETS

Complainants Tell of Long Neglect to Make Repairs in the Pavements.

The condition of the streets in Manhattan formed the sole topic of discussion yesterday in the investigation of Borough President Ahearn's office by the Commissioners of Accounts. The hearing was held in the reception room of the Mayor's office. It had been adjourned on Monday because Mr. Ahearn refused to respond to a subpoena, but, though neither he nor any of the employes of his office who had been summoned were present when the proceedings opened yesterday, the hearing went on.

There was a tilt between counsel at the opening. Martin W. Littleton, counsel for Mr. Ahearn, contending that it was unfair that he should not be allowed to examine witnesses, and if the proceedings were not to become a farce, then the defendant, as Mr. Ahearn appeared to be, should be represented by counsel.

"All I ask," said Mr. Littleton, "is that Mr. Ahearn be treated as a white man who is 21 years old."

John Purroy Mitchell, special Assistant Corporation Counsel, contended that the proceedings were ex parte, with no defendant and no need of counsel for witnesses. The Commissioners took Mr. Mitchell's view of the question and proceeded.

Frederick De Berard of the Merchants' Association was the first witness. He had a lot of photographs of holes in the asphalt pavements all over the city, and said that examinations made by the association in 1904 and 1906 had shown that the streets were in much worse repair in the latter year than in the former. In 1906 1,000 more holes were found, the inspection covering the whole city except Eighth Avenue, where, Mr. De Berard said, the "holes were too numerous to be counted."

At the afternoon session the witness went on to say that an examination made this year had established the fact that there were holes in practically all the streets of the city that had been there for months, some dating back to July of last year. On Thirty-ninth Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, sixteen holes were found, and on the west side of Broadway, between Fifty-fifth and Forty-sixth Streets, ten holes were found, four of which were originally discovered by the association last July.

Allen Wade, a specialist in paving matters who has done similar work in many cities, testified that an inspection made by him of the city south of Fourteenth Street to Park Row had shown him that 60 per cent. of the streets were in a "wretched condition," some of the holes he found being three or four feet in diameter and four or five inches deep. They were extremely dangerous, he said, and in many instances the entire pavement had been worn away. In one place, where the pavement had been restored, it stood a foot above the rest of the street.

"I have never seen a city with the streets in such miserable condition as they are in New York," said Mr. Wade. James W. Howard, who said he had studied the street conditions in many foreign cities and who had examined those in a large part of this city, declared that 50 per cent. of the streets were in very bad repair.

The Commissioners of Accounts stated their intention of having Corporation Counsel Ellison see what can be done to compel Mr. Ahearn and his subordinates to respond to the subpoenas served on them. The Corporation Counsel is in Canada and will not be back until Monday. The hearing will go on to-day from 10:30 until 1 o'clock.

SUBWAY CONTRACT LET.

Degnon Company to Build the Loop Between the Bridges.

The Rapid Transit Commission awarded yesterday the contract for the construction of the first section of the subway loop between the East River bridges to the Degnon Contracting Company without comment. There were only two bids on the work, the other being the Cranston Company of Brooklyn. The Degnon people bid $2,952,000 for the tunnel construction and $83,000 extra for building pipe galleries.

Six votes were required to pass the resolution awarding the contract, and Morris K. Jesup, though ill, came from his home to make up the necessary number. While he was present the plans for changing the Subway and elevated stations at Third Avenue and 149th Street were also put through. Mr. Jesup appeared very weak, and left the meeting the moment his services were no longer required.

George L. Rives of counsel reported to the board yesterday that to make the changes in the Subway at Ninety-sixth Street, suggested by the chief engineer, and calculated to do away with the switches at that point, exactly the same steps would have to be taken as would be necessary in building a new line. Consents of property owners will have to be obtained, and all other formalities will have to be gone through. The matter was referred to the Committee on Plans.

On the suggestion of Mr. Rives, the board voted to instruct the chief engineer to prepare plans of the New York Central's tracks on Eleventh Avenue preparatory to the commencement of condemnation proceedings.

POLICE UPHEAVAL; MORE YET TO COME

McLAUGHLIN IS BANISHED

Cross, McClusky, and Others Among the Slaughtered—Lieut. McCafferty Heads Detective Bureau.

The storm that has been hanging over Police Headquarters for more than a week broke yesterday, and eight Inspectors and almost unaumbered Detective Sergeants (Lieutenants under the new law) in the Detective Bureau were hit. Common patrolmen cluttered the earth. A number of Captains with good records were made Acting Inspectors.

The Inspectors became Captains, their duties to be confined within the little limits of a precinct. The Lieutenants, erstwhile Detective Sergeants, were scattered all over the city.

"And it has only begun," said Deputy Commissioner Bugher last night at 7 o'clock, when he and Commissioner Bingham knocked off work for the day. They had been laboring all day without the assistance of Secretary Slattery, who was ill.

Here are the Inspectors who were reduced and transferred:

The Commissioner had promised three general orders for one day's work. They were forthcoming. One gave the text of the new Bingham police bill, which killed the title of "Inspector" and "Detective Sergeant" and "Roundsman," and did other things. Another reduced the eight Inspectors to mere Captains, made seven Captains into Acting Inspectors, and shifted about several other Inspectors, who are now Acting Inspectors. The third provided that Lieut. James McCafferty should be the temporary head of the Detective Bureau, made vacant by the exile of McLaughlin to a Captaincy in Westchester among the goats. It also transferred a lot of Lieutenants and patrolmen.

Police to Test New Law.

It is pretty certain now that the Bingham Police bill will be fought to the last court by some of the deposed Inspectors. It is expected that four of the eight will begin action in the courts at once. Grant & Rouss, 99 Nassau Street, have already been consulted by some of the Inspectors. The bill will be fought on the ground that it is unconstitutional, the stand being taken that the courts will not stand for reducing the Inspectors without charging them with something and giving them a fair trial.

The Inspectors who were reduced to Captains called at Police Headquarters last night and handed to Chief Inspector Cortright their shields. They received Captain's shields.

The Captains who were made Acting Inspectors also called at Police Headquarters to turn in their shields and get Inspector's shields.

There seemed to be the possibility of a hitch on the proposition of shields, as the Bingham bill was said to have abolished the position of Inspector, and made it possible for a Captain to be appointed an Acting Inspector.

Hard Blow to McLaughlin.

William W. McLaughlin, known as a "Millionaire Cop," who has been head of the Detective Bureau, and was sent to command a little Westchester station, suffered the hardest come-down that the Commissioner handed out yesterday. He left Police Headquarters pretty early yesterday. His magnificent house at 60 East Eighty-third Street, among the millionaires, was closed up fast, outside iron door and all. A footman stood outside to tell reporters that the new Captain of the Westchester Precinct would see no one. He is expected to fight for his title. Following is his record:

WILLIAM McLAUGHLIN—Patrolman, Nov. 26, 1868; Roundsman, Oct. 31, 1870; Sergeant, Feb. 20, 1884; Captain, June 20, 1877; Inspector, Oct. 1, 1892; Deputy Chief, Dec. 9, 1898; rank changed Oct. 30, 1899; dismissed from force June 10, 1895; reinstated, June 18, 1898.

The rumor at Headquarters yesterday was that McCafferty would be the permanent head of the detectives. His rank must be raised to that of a Captain before he can be made an Acting Inspector. McCafferty was appointed to the force in 1887, and has been a Detective Sergeant at Headquarters for years. His record is a clean one.

The next hardest fall was that of Inspector George W. McClusky, whom Devery dubbed "Chesty" McClusky, and whom the old Chief hated. It was he who was the cause of the alleged squabble between the Mayor and Commissioner Bingham this week. It was declared that the Mayor fought against his reduction. He is taken out of the Second District, including the lower west side, and sent to do Captain's work in the old Tenderloin, which has before been a scaffold for undesired police material.

Following is his record:

GEORGE McCLUSKEY—Patrolman, April 26, 1882; Roundsman Dec. 27, 1895; Sergeant, Feb. 17, 1896; Captain, Oct. 20, 1897; Inspector March 9, 1903.

His place in the Second District is taken by Henry Burfeind, raised from the Captaincy of the West 100th Street Station. He is made an Acting Inspector. McClusky is expected to fight the bill.

PLOT TO KILL ROOSEVELT?

Tale of a Slav Laborer Leads Newark Police to Notify Secret Service.

The Newark police are out with the discovery of a plot beside which, in the view of the skeptical Secret Service, all the Anarchist stories that have come from Paterson are milk and water. A Slav laborer named Jan Bartula, who lives at 79 Mercer Street, Newark, walked into Police Headquarters with the revelation of an Anarchist plot to assassinate President Roosevelt, concocted by the identical gang which chose Czolgosz to murder President McKinley.

There is nothing to show that the laborer is not crazy, but the Newark police have been sufficiently impressed by the yarn to call on the Secret Service authorities for help.

Bartula's tale is that he fell in with the gang while working in the Pennsylvania coal fields. Now he has fallen out with the Anarchist plotters and is willing to tell all he knows to get even.

He supplied the police with a list of men who, he said, were the gang that hatched the conspiracy which ended with the assassination of President McKinley. Incidentally, he volunteered the information that the real assassin was never captured, though he does not explain how he got away from the mob that fell upon him in Buffalo at the moment of the shot and beat him nearly to death before he was rescued by the Secret Service men and soldiers.

The names Bartula gave the police were Peter Coates, Paul Noga, Jan Bal, Woznich Zito, Charles Krauss, Jr., "Bill" Staats, "Jim" Goldwitt, and Nitro Kapitula, the latter being a saloonkeeper at Audenreid, Pa. The other men are miners employed at Honeybrook and Hazleton.

Audenreid, the man said, was the first town this side of Hazleton on the Lehigh Valley Railroad.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE Penn., April 19.—Peter Coates and Nitro Kapitula are both residents of McAdoo, near Haleton, and the citizens of that town assert that they are both hard-working, intelligent men. They came to this country about fifteen years ago from Slavonia, and have lived in McAdoo for the last ten years.

Kapitula runs an orderly saloon, and neither he nor Coates has ever been arrested in McAdoo. Coatss is the local agent for the Kaier Brewing Company of Mahoney City. Both men are about 45 years old, and are said to have families.

Hazleton citizens say that the name Jan Bartula is familiar to them, but they cannot remember what his employment was while at Audenreid.

CRUELTY IN STATE HOME.

Jersey Epileptic Says Patients Are Maltreated—A Denial.

William Tulp, 14 years old, of 130 North Park Street, East Orange, an inmate of the State Home for Epileptics at Skillman, N. J., who is at his home on a leave of absence, has told a story of alleged cruelty at the home which is now being investigated by Probation Officer Gascoyne.

According to the story told by the Tulp boy, boy inmates, himself included, have had their heads banged against the walls by attendants and have been beaten with a piece of rubber hose. They have also been obliged to do all kinds of drudgery, he says, and the work of educating them has been neglected. For months at a time, the boy said, he had not had a chance to go to school, and when he wrote a letter to his mother about it the letter was withheld and was never sent.

The boy further stated that frequently after he had a fit he was compelled, although so weak that he could scarcely stand, to do hard work about the place.

SKILLMAN, N. J., April 19.—Dr. Henry M. Weeks, who is in charge of the Home for Epileptics, said to-day that there was no place in the village in which patients are locked up, as Tulp claims. There is a "quieting room," in which any inmate who becomes violent is put, for the safety of both the person who is violent and others. As to education being neglected, there had been no school in the village since last November.

Dr. Weeks said he did not think there had been any head hanging or any beating with a rubber hose, but if there had been no one wished to know about it more than he.

POLICE CHECK DOCK RIOT.

Angry Longshoremen Strike Again for a Saturday Payday.

There was a short-lived riot among the longshoremen employed on the Bush Docks, Brooklyn, yesterday, and the reserves of the Fourth Avenue Station had to be called out. Two men were arrested and two were sent to the hospital with their heads cut.

Demonstrations on the Bush Docks have become an institution since the Bush Terminal Company announced three weeks ago that payday was changed from Saturday until Monday. The men objected and went on strike at the end of last week. There was trouble then, but most of the men later decided to go to work.

"Long Pete," who works at the Erie Basin, came around yesterday and began to talk about the good time he was going to have on Saturday night, and the longing for a Saturday pay night broke out afresh.

With this end in view the men struck again, and began a campaign of beating those who wanted to work. Capt. Joseph O'Rourke of the Bush Docks force held them off with his pistol when they attempted to assault a number of men on Pier 3. He was still blocking an onslaught when the reserves arrived and scattered the rioters.

LARGEY TO BUILD A THEATRE.

Rialto Hears That the W. J. Block Co.'s Backer Has Got Churchill's Site.

It was reported yesterday that the plot of land at the southwest corner of Forty-sixth Street and Broadway, which was sold to a syndicate on Thursday for $1,000,000, had been transferred to M. S. Largey, who has been involved in the various theatrical ventures of the Will J. Block Amusement Company. The latter, with capital furnished by Mr. Largey, has put out such plays as "Comin' Through the Rye," "The Land of Nod," "Genesee of the Hills," and "The Mills of the Gods." The company's manager said that a theatre would be built on the site, and would be ready for occupancy a year from next October.

PREDICTS WAR FOR MASTERY IN PACIFIC

Australian Premier Thinks England Will Have to Fight Germany and Japan.

PILGRIMS GIVE BIG DINNER

LONDON, April 19.—Field Marshal Lord Roberts presided at a banquet given this evening at Claridge's by the Pilgrims' Society in honor of the Colonial Prime Ministers who are in London to take part in the Colonial Conference. It was the most brilliant of the functions in honor of the visiting Premiers since their arrival in this city. The speeches were far from commonplace, and one of them was sensational. It was that of the Australian Premier, who predicted that Great Britain would have to fight Germany and Japan for the mastery of the Pacific.

The members of the society and their guests numbered 350. Twice that number would have attended, but many applications were refused because of the lack of accommodations. At the same table with Lord Roberts sat Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary; Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner; Alfred Deakin, the Premier of Australia, and the Duke of Devonshire.

The Government was represented by a majority of the members of the Cabinet, and in addition many of the most prominent men of the bar, the Church, and the commercial world were present. The Duke of Argyll, Austen Chamberlain, Winston Spencer Churchill, Lord Fairfax, Lord Esher, Lord Fitzmaurice, H. Rider Haggard, Lord Kinnaird, Archdeacon Sinclair, the Duke of Sutherland, Field Marshal Sir George White, Gen. Methuen, and Gen. Nicholson were among those who attended the dinner. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Premier of Canada, Gen. Louis Botha, Premier of the Transvaal, and Dr. Jameson, Premier of Cape Colony, were absent.

Those who delivered speeches were Sir Edward Grey, Mr. Deakin, Sir Joseph Ward, Premier of New Zealand; Alfred Lyttelton, T. W. Smartt, Commissioner of Public Works for Cape Colony, who spoke for Dr. Jameson, who is ill; the Duke of Devonshire, and Lord Roberts.

Sir Edward Grey, in his address, referred to the mistake Great Britain had made in her colonial policy in a former century, and said he was sure this would not be repeated. Sir Edward remarked that he feared the colonists found the Colonial Office much further from the colonies than the colonies were from the Colonial Office.

Mr. Deakin dealt with international problems in straightforward words that undoubtedly will make the careful British diplomatists shudder.

He said it was a fact that the Colonial Office was further from the colonies than the colonies from the Colonial Office, and he emphasized the claim that the colonies should be independent nations. He said it was "refreshing" to come to London and talk with the Government face to face. He promised that Australia next year would inaugurate a system whereby she could defend herself in the event of war without assistance from the mother country. He emphasized the fact that the problems of Australia were not the problems of England, saying the mother country had no Asiatic populations as menacing rivals.

Then, referring obviously to the German occupation of the New Hebrides, the Premier of Australia said he wished it to be noted that England had not allowed a rival European nation to secure a foothold close to Australia without a warning from Australia. While the British navy had not been called on in a test of sea supremacy in the past century, the speaker said this would happen in the next hundred years. Without mentioning nations by name, he predicted pointedly that there would be war for supremacy in the Pacific with Germany and Japan.

Lord Roberts and Mr. Smartt spoke of the reunion of the Anglo-Saxon nation, and reminded their hearers that Americans were taking part in the celebration of the evening.

CAR SMASH ON BRIDGE.

More Than a Dozen Persons Injured in Collision—Scare at Terminal.

There was a rear-end collision of trolley cars on the Brooklyn Bridge at 6 o'clock last evening which shook the structure and brought Capt. Murtha and his policemen to the scene on the double quick. A dozen or more persons were injured and the first car was badly wrecked.

A Park Avenue car smashed into the rear end of a Graham Avenue car just ahead, throwing passengers from their seats. Glass flew in all directions, and the Graham Avenue car was littered with it.

Others hurt and attended by Surgeon Kibbe of the Hudson Street Hospital were Abraham Caggiano of 147 Skillman Street, Brooklyn; Abraham Figgenbaum of 6 East 108th Street, Isidor Janos of 54 East 100th Street, and Harvey Holtz of 1,109 Manhattan Avenue, Brooklyn, the motorman of the Graham Avenue car.

Charles Martin of 193 Ainslee Street, Brooklyn, motorman of the Park Avenue car, was breaking in John Hustage, a green man, who was running the car. Hustage said the tracks were slippery and that he lost control of the car.

Two hours before this smashup a Myrtle Avenue car jumped the track as it was entering a loop at the Manhattan terminal and crashed into an iron column. The car hood was smashed and the passengers thrown into a panic and badly shaken up.

ODD STORM HITS LINER.

Compass Does Strange Antics on La Provence.

For five hours on Tuesday and Wednesday the French liner La Provence, which sailed from Havre on April 18 and arrived here last evening, passed through a storm of cyclonic force, during which the wireless apparatus was temporarily put out of commission and the needle of the compass jumped about in the strangest fashion. The storm, the ship's officers say, has seldom been equalled on the North Atlantic, and during the height of it La Provence was above to. The officers could only explain the queer behavior of compass and wireless apparatus by connecting it with the recent earthquake disturbance in Mexico.

Day broke on Tuesday with the weather exceptionally fine and the sea calm. Capt. Alix was on his way to his cabin at 8 P. M. to dress for dinner when he happened to glance at the glass. The mercury was going down fast. The skipper did not go to dinner; instead he prepared to weather the dirty spell he knew was coming.

It was about midnight when the compass began to do "stunts" and the atmosphere became charged with electricity. The needle danced about and became so erratic that the Captain sent for a reserve instrument. It was brought to the chartroom, and it, too, began to act as though possessed by some evil spirit.

The wind increased in violence and the sea began to break inboard, sweeping the decks and thundering against the superstructure. The stewards were sent about the vessel to close all ports against an invasion of the flood.

From 1 P. M. to 6 A. M. on the morning of April 17 the ship logged only 15 knots.

With the dying down of the storm the compass began to act in a well-ordered manner and the wireless instrument continued in good order.

SHOT THROUGH A WINDOW.

Man Held for Wounding Four Persons In Hackensack.

Four persons were shot in the home of John Falato on Chestnut Avenue, Hackensack, last night. An unknown man broke a pane of glass in a front window, thrust a revolver into the room, and fired five shots from it. Those wounded were:

James Wenzie, 27 years old; wounded in the right arm and in the right cheek.

Lizzie Falato, 9 years old; shot in the left leg.

Nobody identified the man who did the shooting. Just before the affair occurred Philip Conti, 24 years old, who was under the influence of liquor, was in Falato's barber shop and quarreled with two men there. He tried to pull a revolver, but was prevented and put out. The shots were fired into the house a few minutes later. Constable Garret A. Dawson and Policeman Graber went to Conti's house and arrested him on suspicion, and he is detained. Although it is said Conti had a revolver when he was at the barber shop, none was found on him nor in his house when he was arrested.

MAY BE MISSING MARVIN BOY.

Child with Peddlers at Gloversville Says He Is "Hello Pete."

Special to The New York Times.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., April 19.—A small boy who answers in many ways the description of Horace N. Marvin, Jr., the four-year-old son of Dr. Marvin of Dover, Del., who was kidnapped over a month ago, has been found here in company of a traveling peddler and his wife, who, the child says, are not his "mamma" and "papa."

His striking resemblance to the Marvin child was at once apparent, and the local authorities communicated with the Dover police. Nothing was done to excite the fears of the peddler, but a close watch was kept on his movements. The stranger seemed to have become aware that he was being shadowed, and late this afternoon attempted to slip out of town. This strengthened the suspicions of the Chief of Police, and he detained him. Meanwhile, Dr. Marvin had been so much impressed with the description of the boy sent from here that he wired his brother-in-law, Myles Standish of New York to start immediately to see the child. He has been expected on every train tonight.

The peddler and his wife insist that the child is theirs, but the youngster persists in denying that they are his "mamma" and "papa." Beyond that the police have been able to learn nothing from him except that he is "Hello, Pete." This is the name by which Dr. Marvin used to call his boy. He is too young to talk understandingly.

ENOUGH CARNEGIE LIBRARIES.

Please Don't Give the City Any More for Two Years, Metz Says.

The Board of Estimate awarded yesterday the contract for the interior finish of the new Public Library to the John Pierce Company, which bid $3,330,000. At the same time Controller Metz told the board that $300,000 was needed to acquire property for Carnegie library sites, and that he had informed the donor of libraries that the city could not accept any new ones for the next two years.

The John Pierce Company's bid was the lowest of several sent to the Controller for the finishing work on the library, and the Mayor announced that the completion of the work under that contract would bring the total cost of the library up to $10,000,000. A representative of the Central Federated Union protested against the award on the ground that the Pierce Company had no plant in this city. He was told to make his protest to the contractors.

At the meeting the Mayor announced that the Poulsen plan for relieving the Brooklyn Bridge crush would be tried out at Coney Island next Sunday morning.

GOV. HAGERMAN'S THREAT.

Will Resign and Then Make Startling Exposures, He Says.

ST. LOUIS, April 19.—Gov. N. L. Hagerman of New Mexico, whose resignation as Governor has been officially requested, departed to-night for New Mexico. He said that his resignation had been requested as the result of enmity incurred through his efforts to overthrow a ring of grafters.

He said that he would send his resignation to President Roosevelt as soon as he reached Albuquerque and that he would then make startling exposures.

HUGHES FOES GET OUT---ROOSEVELT

Even Lukewarm Federal Office Holders in New York Are in Peril.

WILL BACK THE GOVERNOR

Official Announcement of the President's Position in Politics Here—Doesn't Affect Taft Fight.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—It was officially announced at the White House this afternoon that President Roosevelt is with Gov. Hughes in his fight in New York.

It was further made known there that the President is not content with being passively in sympathy with the Governor, but is actively aiding him by making such Federal appointments as will strengthen the Governor's hands, and is even letting out Federal officials who are lukewarm or hostile.

Finally, it was explained that this support of Gov. Hughes has nothing to do with the Presidential situation and relates only to the Governor's fight for good government in his own State. This last announcement is to dispose of the reports let loose lately by the enemies of Secretary Taft to the effect that the President contemplated deserting him in favor of Gov. Hughes as a Presidential aspirant.

The source of these canards is tolerably well known in Washington. They proceed from another Presidential aspirant, whose friends have been industriously trying to spread abroad the report that the President is lukewarm toward Mr. Taft or that Taft is no more his candidate than anybody else.

The President has not changed his attitude toward Taft since the last time he uttered that often-repeated declaration of his, "I would go from the White House to the Capitol and back again on my hands and knees if that would help Taft to be President."

This other Presidential candidate, who is no more desirous of seeing Gov. Hughes nominated than of seeing Mr. Taft nominated, has suffered somewhat by reason of the identification of Taft's candidacy with the Administration policies, and his friends have been quietly trying to check the progress of the Taft boom by giving the impression that the President is getting ready to drop Taft for Hughes. Knowing that he is not getting ready to do anything of the sort, they count on impeding Taft's progress by this means, without doing any particular good to Hughes.

These reports would not have met with so ready a crowd of gullible listeners if it were not for the erroneous impression current in Washington that Taft has an uphill road to travel in Ohio, and that Foraker and Dick are to have an easy thing of it. The exact reverse is the fact, as anybody who has been in Ohio recently knows. The Taft forces there are carrying everything before them so far, and Foraker and Dick are on the defensive, not on the aggressive. The mistaken idea, however, that Taft has but slight chance in Ohio has given currency to the report coming from interested sources that the President despairs of Taft's success and is about to desert him.

As to the President's support of Gov. Hughes in his fight in New York, that has long been tacitly understood by those who visit the White House, but the utterance to-day was the first official declaration on the subject. It was drawn forth by ex-Representative Wadsworth's fulmination of yesterday, in which the President was accused of trying to drive Wadsworth's friends out of politics in the interest of Congressman Peter Porter, Wadsworth's successor.

The fact that Mr. Porter is in sympathy with Gov. Hughes is vouched for. It is further pointed out that it has always been the custom to give new Republican Congressmen some patronage in their districts. This statement officially settles the question raised by Wadsworth's friends as to whether Mr. Porter is a Republican or not. It is also stated that the White House has nothing against Speaker Wadsworth, the ex-Representative's son, and that the Administration will continue to uphold the Speaker's hand.

It is expected that these announcements will have effect upon scaring Federal office holders in other parts of the State who may be hostile to Gov. Hughes.

Despite these White House statements, there is another feature of this subject. Mr. Wadsworth is determined to have himself elected a delegate to the National Convention as a vindication. If the Federal Administration continues to break down his power in his district as it has been doing, it is to be supposed that Mr. Wadsworth will not find his vindication so easy to obtain. It is plain, of course, that if Wadsworth is elected a delegate he will go as an anti-Roosevelt delegate, and that there will be at least one vote in the New York delegation against the President and his policies and candidates.

If the President desires to have some control over the next National Convention he naturally will want to have his own State solid for him, and there is reason to suppose he does not care to have an active insurgent in the delegation. If he does not, he is going about the right way to prevent it.

NOT SERIOUS YET—HARMON.

He Talks of the Presidential Boom Started for Him.

CINCINNATI, April 19.—"There is just an excess of political lightning around Cincinnati now," said Judson Harmon today, "and one of the shafts happened to hit me."

Mr. Harmon hadn't heard of any Presidential boom in his behalf until the news came over the wires from Washington, he said. The matter was not serious enough "yet" for any statement, he said.

DROP MUNICIPAL OWENRSHIP.

Rutherford Citizens Decide Not to Build Gas Plant.

Special to The New York Times.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., April 19.—The plan of municipal ownership of a lighting plant by this borough was rejected tonight at a public meeting called by Mayor Andrew H. Brinkerhoff.

A committee of fifteen was appointed a year ago to investigate the question. Nine members of the committee presented a majority report, with which the other six disagreed.

"It should be mentioned," the majority report says, "that every member of our committee is, in the abstract, in favor of municipal ownership. As a concrete proposition, however, the facts elicited compel a contrary judgment, so far as Rutherford is concerned, at the present time."

The minority report agreed that it was indavisable for the borough to install at the present time a municipal gas plant, but advocated the establisbment of an electric plant.

SUIT AGAINST HITCHCOCK.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., April 19.—Taking advantage of the presence in this city of E. A. Hitchcock, formerly Secretary of the Interior, Dr. T. B. Rider to-day filed suit against him in the Circuit Court for $100,000, the suit being based upon arrests and prosecutions of Dr. Rider for alleged violations of the rules and regulations of the Interior Department which were promulgated while Mr. Hitchcock was a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet.

Dr. Rider, in the body of his complaint, charges that the prosecutions were irregular, and that they were the result of a conspiracy to injure him financially.

STRIKE LIKELY ON LINERS.

Steamship Companies Ready for Walkout by First and Second Officers.

There is a strong possibility of a strike on the coastwise steamship lines as a result of the demand of Harbor No. 1 of the American Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots for higher wages for first, second, and third officers.

It became known yesterday that the Merchants and Miners Steamship Company of Baltimore is preparing for a strike. Men who applied at 18 Broadway, where for some time first and second officers have been advertised for, said they were told they were wanted for the Merchants and Miners' Company's vessels.

Secretary Campbell of the Ward Line said yesterday that the managers of the different companies in the Consolidated Steamship lines would likely act on the union's petition in a few days. He would make no predictions as to what action would be taken.

ROMANCE OF CENTENARIANS.

ST. LOUIS, April 19.—It was announced to-day that John B. Bundren, who is 101 years old, will marry Miss Rose McGuire on her 100th birthday, Aug. 26 next. They were sweethearts in Tennessee in their youth, but neither has been married.

Miss McGuire's parents would not let her marry Bundren, and took her to live in England. Bundren went to California and acquired considerable wealth. He returned to Tennessee and bought the Bundren homestead, near Tatesville. He decided to hold a reunion of old friends on his estate this year, and sent out invitations, including Miss McGuire. Correspondence followed, he renewed his offer of marriage, and was accepted. The date for the wedding and the reunion of friends was then set for Aug. 26.

Bundren will go to England in June to escort his intended bride to his Tennessee estate for the wedding.

FASTED FOR 45 DAYS.

Woman Ate Nothing Until All Rheumatic Pain Had Passed.

Special to The New York Times.

WEBSTER CITY, Iowa, April 19.—After fasting for forty-five days, during which not a morsel of food passed her lips, Mrs. Harriet M. Closz of this city last night began taking nourishment.

Mrs. Closz began fasting as a cure for rheumatism, and declared that she would eat absolutely nothing until every vestige of rheumatic pain had left her. She has been free from all pain for the past week. During the first week she suffered from hunger and rheumatism, but after the first two weeks, she says, she felt no hunger at all. While she grew somewhat weaker, considerable strength remained with her, and she did her housework during the whole of her fastings.

CONVICTED OF LAND FRAUDS.

Three Men Tried to Cheat the Government Out of 500,000 Acres.

OMAHA, April 19.—Thomas M. Huntington, Alfred B. Todd, and Fred Hoyt were convicted to-day in the United States Court on charges of conspiracy to defraud the Government of 500,000 acres of public lands in Sheridan and Cherry Counties, Neb. The cases have been on trial for ten days.

Huntington, a banker at Gordon, Neb., furnished the money to pay the expenses of the entrymen. Hoyt is his partner. Todd, a resident of Denver, got old soldiers to file claims on the homesteads.

AMAZED AT OUR COALFIELDS.

Morning Visitors Don Evening Dress to Tell the President So.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—President Roosevelt to-day gave a reception to a party of Austro-Hungarians who are making a tour of the United States, looking particularly into the coal industry. They included J. Petsehek of Aussig, Bohemia, a coal operator; several of his relatives, Counselors Bihl and Hvizdalek, and Engineer Loecker.

The visitors wore evening dress, a costume rarely if ever seen at the White House at a morning function. They told the President that they had enjoyed their trip very much and were amazed as well as greatly instructed by the sights they had seen.

"The people of this country, I feel sure, have little idea of the magnitude of the Illinois and Missouri coal fields," said Mr. Petsehek. "We were simply astounded."

LONDON, April 19.—Sir George Alexander Cooper, Bart., and Lady Cooper sailed to-day on the Deutschland for America for the purpose of aiding in the settlement of the estate of James Henry Smith, who died in Japan on March 27 while on a honeymoon trip around the world.

It is understood by the friends of Lady Cooper, who is a sister of the late James Henry Smith, that the greater part of Mr. Smith's estate, which is reported here to amount to over $70,000,000, has been left to her. James Henry Smith and Lady Cooper were children of George S. Smith of Evanston, Ill., a cousin of George Smith, the Chicago real estate owner, and promoter of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad and other Western enterprises, who left James Henry Smith a fortune of $50,000,000. Lady Cooper is said to have received an equal amount from George Smith's estate. James Henry Smith was erroneously known as a nephew of George Smith, being in fact, like his sister, only a second cousin.

According to their friends, the Coopers will remain in America until July, by which time, it is hoped, the plans for the settlement of the estate will have been completed.

Miss Effie Evans, whose sister married Eugene Zimmermann of Cincinnati, is authority for the statement that the Duchess of Manchester, who, with the Duke, was on the trip with Mr. Smith at the time of his death, has also been remembered in Mr. Smith's will. Miss Evans said to me to-day:

"The Duchess of Manchester will inherit a substantial sum by the will of Mr. Smith, but I cannot say exactly how much. The Duke and Duchess are now in America, or about to arrive there, and before they return to England they will meet the Coopers for a discussion of the settlement of the estate."

Sir George Cooper was a hard-working country barrister when his wife inherited her millions from George Smith. The change in his financial circumstances caused him to abandon the law and adopt the life of a country gentleman. He takes great interest in agriculture and stock breeding. One of his country places is Hursley Park, near Winchester. The other is near Elgin. His town residence in Grosvenor Square is a very beautiful mansion and contains many valuable art treasures. Sir George was created a baronet in 1905.

Sir George and Lady Cooper have two sons and one daughter. The heir to the baronetcy, George James Robertson Cooper, who is likely one day to be one of the richest men in the world, was born in 1890. Sir George is a Deputy Lieutenant for Morayshire and a Justice of the Peace for Morayshire and South Hampshire. He is Lieutenant Colonel of the Third Volunteer Battalion of the Seaforth Highlanders. He was born in 1856 and married Miss Smith in 1887.

If the opening of the will confirms the London news, Lady Cooper will become easily the richest woman in the world. With an initial inheritance of upward of $50,000,000 from the late George Smith and an even larger amount as her share of the money left by James Henry Smith, her fortune will reach figures well in excess of $100,000,000, and she will outrank in point of wealth even Mrs. Anne Weightman-Walker of Philadelphia, who inherited $60,000,000 from her father and has been regarded as the richest woman, and Mrs. Hetty Green, who previously was often called the world's richest woman.

On this side of the water little or nothing has been heard definitely about the prospects of the Smith estate eavs that the will would not, in any event, be opened until after the funeral. But from a source as well informed of the personal affairs of Mr. Smith as any in New York, it was learned yesterday that he is understood to have made abundant provision for his widow, who as Mrs. William Rhinelander Stewart had already a large fortune of her own before she married James Henry Smith.

The inference upon this information would be, in the event that the will turns the bulk of the estate over to Lady Cooper, that a cash settlement satisfactory to Mrs. Smith was effected at the time of the marriage or soon afterward.

The reports which have been in circulation for some time that there would be a contest over the will took definite form yesterday in a printed story that an attorney had been retained in this city to make the fight for a distribution of the estate to the relatives, of whom there appear to be six at least, in addition to Lady Cooper. These reports were positively denied, however, by some of Mr. Smith's relatives in Evanston, Ill., who were named as among those likely to join in the contest. Mrs. Victor A. Rossbach of 1,021 Lee Street, Evanston, a sister of James Henry Smith, said to a TIMES correspondent:

"I know nothing of the proposed contest, and I have no intention of being a party to it, if one is made."

On behalf of his wife, who is also a sister, J. N. Mills of Evanston expressed a similar view, while William S. Mason, Vice President of the City National Bank of Evanston and a nephew of James Henry Smith, said:

"I do not think there is any possibility of a contest being made to break the will of my uncle."

Mr. Smith's mother, Mrs. Beatrice Smith, now 80 years old, is living in Evanston, and is still strong for her years and in good health. It is said that few people there knew of her relationship to New York's "silent millionaire." It was the intention of Mr. Smith to visit his mother and present his bride on his return from the East.

The same authority who declared yesterday that Mr. Smith had undoubtedly made provision for his wife was of the opinion that the relatives would also find themselves taken care of, and that in any event it was unlikely that Mr. Smith, being himself a lawyer and having at his disposal the best legal talent in the world, would make a will that was easily breakable. Moreover, it was added that he had been most generous to his near relatives in his lifetime.

"It is not likely," said this man, "that Mr. Smith would change when he made his will the disposition he had maintained toward his relatives ever since he came into the possession of his fortune."

Sir George Cooper and Lady Cooper will arrive next Thursday on the Deutschland. It is understood that they will go to Chicago and meet the body, which is being brought back from the Orient, and the funeral party will arrive in New York on May 3. It is expected that the burial will take place the following day.

NEW HOSPITAL SITE.

Lincoln Trustees Buy Whole Block Adjoining Present Property.

J. Clarence Davies has sold for the trustees of the estate of Samuel E. Lyon the entire block bounded by 141st Street, 142d Street, the Southern Boulevard, and Wales Avenue. The consideration was between $75,000 and $100,000. The purchasers are the Trustees of the Lincoln Hospital, and they are to present it to the hospital. It is said that Morris K. Jesup and Miss Emily Booth, who are both connected with the management of the institution, are the principal donors.

The Lincoln Hospital was established where it now stands, on the block bounded by 141st and 142d Streets, Concord Avenue, and the Southern Boulevard, about ten years ago. The increasing population of the Bronx has overtaxed the present building, and it is proposed to build additional wards on the property just bought. A convalescent ward will also be established.

The new property contains about thirty city lots, and on it stands the old homestead of Samuel E. Lyon, once a prominent lawyer in New York. The Trustees of his estate are Francis C. Huntington, Alfred Seton, and Miss Fanny C. Lyon.

80,000 TINS OF BAD SALMON.

Seized in Montreal While Being Sold at Auction.

MONTREAL, April 19.—The Civic Health Department to-day seized and destroyed 80,000 tins of salmon valued at $8,000. The salmon was shipped here from Toronto and was being auctioned off to retail grocers.

Dr. McCarry, the Chief Food Inspector, found the fish to be badly decomposed and totally unfit for use. Wholesale cases of ptomaine posoning would have resulted, he declared, had the salmon reached the public. An effort is being made to discover the shipper.

Negro Hallboy and Jewels Missing.

The police of the East 104th Street Station are looking for Samuel Pommut, a colored youth, who since last Saturday and until last night was hallboy at the Balmorel, 70 Lenox Avenue. Pommut disappeared last night. At the same time there vanished $500 worth of jewelry belonging to Mrs. Abraham Gressman, who lives in the apartment house.

FREE GLASSES PLAN MEETS OPPOSITION

Supt. Maxwell's Proposal Sharply Criticised by Charity Organizations.

THEIR WORK, NOT CITY'S

Adoption of the System, They Say, Would Be False Charity—Sharp Talk at Hearing.

The friends and foes of the proposition pending before the Board of Education to furnish free eyeglasses to all school children, whose parents cannot afford to buy them, had their hearing last night before the Committee on Elementary Schools, of which Abraham Stern is chairman. The committee le committed to the free eyeglasses plan. Last night its friends outside the Board proved to be exclusively a delegation of school principals mustered by Supt. William H. Maxwell. Against the measure were representatives of most of the largest charitable organizations in the city. The hearing was productive of some rather sharp talk before it was over.

The protestants of last night did not take the position that the school children whose vision is defective should not be taken care of. On the contrary they commended the board in its undertaking to have the children examined and their sight corrected wherever it was possible. What they did object to was that the city should furnish the eyeglasses free to the children of indigent parents on the ground, first, that there were plenty of organizations which would perform this service in the cases of real need, and second, that any general action by the School Board, if not absolutely unlawful, would be false charity and tend to defeat the ends for which it was intended.

That the feeling was not quite pleasant in some instances developed when Charles C. Burlingham, formerly President of the Board of Education and now Chairman of an organization known as the Committee on the Physical Welfare of Schoolchildren, turned his attention to the recommendations of Supt. Maxwell, favoring the plan.

Supt. Maxwell Attacked.

"Mr. Maxwell is a persistent man," declared Mr. Burlingham, "and even when he is making mistakes he sticks to his proposition." Mr. Burlingham believed that the Board of Health should go right ahead with its examinations of schoolchildren, but he attacked the figures in Supt. Maxwell's report, which purported to show that only 36,000 children would need glasses if the city undertook to supply them free.

"I don't argue on the matter of cost," said Mr. Burlingham. "The poor old taxpayer is a back number in these days, but I would like to know where Mr. Maxwell got this sacred figure of 36,000 pupils. I have tried to find out. I found his report a mine of information, some gold, some brass, some lead, and when I had gone all through it I found that he had done what we all have done when we're tired—he referred me to Dr. Darlington. And when I see these innocent gentlemen headed by Mr. Stern, my excellent friend, convinced they would only need from the city 20,000 pairs of glasses at $1 a pair, I am moved to think what it costs me to keep my own three children in eyeglasses, which have to be replaced from time to time upon re-examination, or when they are lost or broken.

"If this is a proposition of pure Socialism, and the board intends to go on from eyeglasses to supplying food and clothing and gold fillings for the children's teeth, I have nothing to say about it. But as a way of accomplishing a much-desired end I am against it altogether."

Jacob A. Riis Quoted Against It.

Mr. Burlingham read a letter from Jacob A. Riis in which he declared that although he had long wanted to have the condition of the school children's eyes looked into, the proposition to furnish eyeglasses was about as sensible as a proposition to furnish clocks so that the children might get to school on time.

The Rev. Dr. D. J. McMahon, Supervisor of the Catholic Charities of the city, opposed the free eyeglass proposition on the ground that the most important thing in all charity work was a proper investigation of the beneficiaries, and that the entry of the Board of Education in this field would tend to make many families look to charity who might otherwise supply their own children's needs.

"As we used to say when I was a boy," said Dr. McMahon, "'Shinny on your own side.' Your duty is to look after the education of the children; ours is to look after the charitable side, and it is all important not to duplicate charities."

A Charity Function, Says Dr. Bull.

Dr. Charles S. Bull of the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary said of his experience there since 1872 was that there were very few cases coming up for treatment in that institution in which the parents were unable to provide glasses for the children, and in such cases, he added, it was always possible to have the glasses furnished through charitable institutions. He declared also that it was preposterous to expect a $1,200 Inspector of the Board of Health properly to diagnose the affections of the eye, which required the most expert oculists to handle in hospital work.

Dr. Henry D. Chapin backed up Dr. Bull, and added that there were many defects in the eyesight of children which would come in for glasses under the proposed rule of the board which glasses could not remedy in the slightest degree.

William R. Nichols of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities suggested that, as various organizations were ready to supply glasses to children, the Board of Education had better use its funds in needful work along other lines, which it cannot do under present conditions.

Then Dr. C. B. Meany of the Harlem Eye and Ear Infirmary told how in that institution out of nearly 4,000 children treated for eye affections in five years there were but 31 cases in which the glasses were not paid for by the parents. He suggested that the city reimburse every charitable institution called upon to furnish glasses.

"Then," he said, "we could be reasonably sure that there wasn't anything in this question but charity."

On behalf of the United Hebrew Charities, Dr. Lee Frankel offered to have every Jewish child supplied who needed glasses that parents could not buy, and Edward T. Devine, Secretary of the Charity Organization Society, referred to the project as "unnecessary, unwise, and demoralizing."

Along about this time somebody asked if the other side was not going to be heard from, and Mr. Stern called Supt. Maxwell. Mr. Maxwell suggested that he should speak after all the others had concluded, but Mr. Burlingham took exception to this proposition, and so Mr. Maxwell suggested that Dr. John J. Cronan of the Board of Health should talk.

Dr. Cronan said that the children ought to be attended to at once, and the parents investigated afterward, but he didn't think that the board should furnish the glasses.

After Dr. Cronan various school Principals were marshaled by Mr. Stern and Supt. Maxwell. Most of them read essays which they had prepared advocating the plan which Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Stern's committee are in favor of. The essays were still being presented at a late hour.

ATTEMPTS SUICIDE IN HOTEL.

Benedict Gimbel, Accused by Detectives, Cuts His Throat.

Benedict Gimbel of Philadelphia, who was arrested in this city on Friday by two of the District Attorney's detectives, who charged that he had attempted to bribe them, attempted suicide yesterday afternoon by slashing his throat and left wrist with pieces of a broken glass pitcher in a room of the Palace Hotel, in Hoboken. He is now in St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, with a good chance for recovery.

Mr. Gimbel was bailed out of the Tombs at 10:30 o'clock on Friday night, and was taken by friends to the Pennsylvania ferry. There the friends left him, expecting him to take the train to Philadelphia. Instead, on reaching Jersey City he took a car to Hoboken.

He arrived at the Palace Hotel at 11:15 o'clock, and registered as Wilson Helvridge of Trenton. He went to his room, saying that he was tired, and would probably sleep late.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a maid rapped at the door of the room, but was told from within to go away.

When she rapped again just before 6 o'clock she received no answer, and the clerk forced open the door. Mr. Gimbel was found lying in front of the door of the bathroom adjoining his room with his throat and left wrist cut. His windpipe was severed, but the wrist cut was only superficial.

The cuts had been made with a small piece of glass, a fragment of the water pitcher, which he had evidently broken on the edge of the bathtub.

When the clerk entered Mr. Gimbel moved slightly and moaned, "Water, water." Then he appeared to lose consciousness.

An ambulance was called and Mr. Gimbel was taken to St. Mary's Hospital. There under the ministrations of Dr. J. C. Farr and Dr. M. F. Foley he recovered slightly and motioned for a pad and paper and pencil. These were given to him and he wrote "Joseph Hetherington, Depot House, Trenton," and "Give me ether or chloroform, please, and give me water. Spare no expense, but save me." Then he relapsed into a stupor.

Dr. Farr sewed up the man's windpipe and inserted a silver tube through which the injured man could breathe. Dr. Farr said late last night that the greatest danger was from pneumonia. At midnight Mr. Gimbel was sleeping.

When his room at the Palace Hotel was searched it was found that Mr. Gimbel had stuffed the cracks of the door and the windows with surgeon's gauze as though he had intended to turn on the gas to kill himself. The room, though it had gas fixtures, was lighted, however, by electricity alone.

In his pockets were several of his cards and a police pass signed by Mayor Weaver of Philadelphia, a fifty-trip book over the Pennsylvania Railroad between Philadelphia and New York, made out in his name and a check for $1,250 made out to Benedict Gimbel on the Commercial Trust Company and signed by Joseph Weil. These led to his identification, and Charles Gimbel, a brother, and Bernard Gimbel, a nephew, who were at a New York hotel, were soon at the hospital.

Isaac Gimbel, his brother, with Mrs. Benedict Gimbel, arrived from Philadelphia at 11 o'clock last night, having started as soon as they heard from the Hoboken police, and went to the sick man's bedside.

"Mr. Benedict Gimbel has been in poor health for the last few weeks. His brothers have been urging him to take a vacation, which he has refused to do.

"At intervals during the past few weeks Mr. Gimbel's mind has been a blank. In the last three months he has been to New York twice. His condition has not permitted him to go over more frequently. He has always enjoyed a spotless reputation, and his domestic life has been one of complete happiness."

Mrs. Gimbel came from Philadelphia this evening and is with her husband. Dr. Jurist of Philadelphia and Drs. Farr and Foley of St. Mary's Hospital, report his condition as favorable and expect an early recovery.

STEAD AT COOPER UNION.

Says We Are the Most "International" Nation in the World.

W. T. Stead, the English editor, was the principal speaker last night at Cooper Union under the auspices of the People's Institute. Charles Sprague Smith presided and introduced Mr. Stead, who said in part:

"The United States is the most international nation in the world. As you are all living together I think you ought to be prompt to respond to make substantial progress toward the United States of the World.

"We of Europe regard you as a new nation who will not shrink from the leadership of the world. In the year 1898, when the Czar of Russia summoned the world to The Hague, the nations thought well of disarmament. What has happened since? They have gone on increasing their military and naval forces. Six hundred million dollars a year has been added to the naval and military equipment since The Hague conference.

"The Morocco trouble has put back the cause of peace in France for at least ten years. France is not in an idealistic mood at present. Quite the reverse. From France I went to Italy. They told me that Italy was for peace. They said Italy would support England and America in anything they would do for peace at The Hague Tribunal."

GRAND JURY AND ROEHR CASE.

Inquiry Into Missing Man's Affairs Begun in Brooklyn.

It was reported at the County Court House in Brooklyn yesterday that the Kings County April Grand Jury had started an investigation into the affairs of Edward H. M. Roehr, lawyer and former Assemblyman, who disappeared two weeks ago. Several bankers, some of them from Manhattan, appeared before the Grand Jury. They had been summoned, it was said, to tell what they knew of Roehr's dealings with them.

District Attorney Clarke refused to make any statement regarding the case. Friends of Roehr gave no credence yesterday to the theory that he has committed suicide. They say he loved life too much to make away with himself.

Wisconsin's Anti-Tobacco Bill.

MADISON, Wis., April 19.—A bill prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to persone under sixteen was adopted today by the State Assembly. The bill also prohibits such minors from using tobacco.

POLICE UPHEAVAL; MORE YET TO COME

Brooklyn and Queens, is shipped to the Hamburg Avenue Station in Brooklyn. He is not even brought to Manhattan, where he has a fine house. He was dismissed in 1903, but was restored after a fight in the courts. He will fight again, it is almost sure. This is his record:

ADAM A. CROSS—Patrolman Oct. 16, 1878; Roundsman Sept. 28, 1882; Sergeant Jan. 3, 1884; Captain Dec. 8, 1890; Inspector Oct. 13, 1897. Dismissed April 6, 1903; restored Dec. 22, 1904.

Stephen O'Brien, who has been on the force many years, and who was mentioned as a possible successor of Commissioner Bingham himself if the Mayor should get rid of him, is sent from the Coney Island District to do a Captain's work in the West Thirty-seventh Street Station. That work is now quite as dangerous as that in the Tenderloin, and it is predicted that O'Brien will soon slide further. Some time ago O'Brien was sent to the Tenderloin as a Captain. He got out of the precinct quickly. He was sick, he said. He became an Inspector since Bingham took office. Following is his record:

It cannot be predicted safely whether he will join the fight against the Bingham bill. He is said to be as yet undecided. His district at Coney Island is to be filled by Patrick J. Harkins, who is raised from the Captaincy of the West Twentieth Street Station.

Inspector Thomas Murphy is sent from the Ninth District in Brooklyn to do Captain's duty at the Adams Street Station, Brooklyn's Tenderloin. He is not expected to fight the Bingham bill. This is his record:

THOMAS MURPHY, patrolman Dec. 23, 1867; Roundsman Nov. 23, 1870; Sergeant Sept. 1, 1878; Captain June 22, 1880; Inspector March 12, 1895.

Murphy just swaps jobs with George H. Holahan, who is said to be a stanch friend of Senator McCarren. Holahan is made an Acting Inspector, going to the Ninth District. Murphy is reduced to a Captaincy, and is sent to take Holahan's precinct.

Long Transfer for Grant.

Inspector Donald Grant got his papers last night at 8 o'clock to walk from the Flatbush District in Brooklyn to the Captaincy of the West 100th Street Station. He is said to be all broken up by the recent death of a son and wants to resign. His place will be taken by John J. O'Brien, who is advanced from the Captaincy of the Hamburg Avenue Station, Brooklyn. Grant's record follows:

DONALD GRANT, patrolman June 1, 1876; Roundsman Feb. 10, 1877; Sergeant May 25, 1880; Captain Sept. 13, 1887; Inspector Feb. 14, 1898; dismissed Feb. 4, 1903; restored March 22, 1904.

Inspector James Kane goes from the Jamaica District to be captain of the West Twentieth Street Station. He was forced to retire in 1889, but had himself reinstated. But he is not expected to fight in the courts this time. Inspector Nally, who is not reduced, is sent from the lower end of Manhattan Island to take Kane's place in the suburbs. This is his record:

JAMES KANE.—Patrolman Sept. 29, 1883; Roundsman, Dec. 29, 1886; Sergeant, Jan. 19, 1889; Captain, no date; Inspector, Dec. 9, 1898; was retired Jan. 31, 1899; reinstated May 4, 1900.

City Island for Wiegand.

The eighth and last Inspector to get mixed up in the storm that started yesterday was John Wiegand. He went last night from the Eighth Inspection District in Brooklyn to be a Captain on City Island, one of the suburban places where Captains have been wont to retreat to eat humble pie. But Wiegand is expected to join the warlike McLaughlin, Cross, and McCluskey in fighting the Bingham bill. Inspector Hussey, who has been commanding the territory including most of the Tenderloin precincts, goes over to take Wiegand's place, while Capt. John Russell, who has been doing great work in the West Thirty-seventh Street Precinct, goes to be Acting Inspector of the Tenderloin District, bossing it over McClusky. This heave-up of the force is putting more than one Captain over an Inspector who has previously lorded it over him.

Following is the record of the last of the deposed Inspectors:

JOHN WIEGAND—Patrolman Sept. 8, 1869; Roundsman, June 16, 1884; Sergeant June 21, 1887; Captain Oct. 20, 1897; Inspector June 23, 1903.

General Order No. 21, the piece of paper that wrought the worst havoc yesterday, raises seven Captains to "act as Inspectors of Police, with the title while acting of Inspector of Police." Eleven Inspectors who were robbed of their titles with the signing of the Bingham bill were also detailed in the same way. The permanent title of Inspector is done away with. The former Captains detailed to do the work of Inspectors will get $3,500 a year, the regular salary for commanding a district. Following are the fortunate seven:

Capt. John Burns from East 126th Street to the lower Tenderloin.
Capt. James F. Thompson from Thirtieth Street to the Bronx.
Capt. George R. Holahan from Adams Street, Brooklyn, to the Eighth Brooklyn District.

Cortright Holds His Job.

Moses W. Cortright, dean of all the Inspectors, who has been their chief for some time, keeps his place and title, though it is only "to act" as such. He holds his job no matter which way the wind blows. The list of the other Inspectors who fared well follows:

John W. Flood is promoted to the Borough Inspectorship of Brooklyn.
Richard Walsh remains on the upper west side.
Dennis Sweeny remains in West Harlem.
James E. Hussey is transferred from the New York to the Brooklyn Tenderloin.
William G. Hogan remains in Staten Island.
Max Schmittberger remains in charge of the Traffic Squad
Sylvester Baldwin remains in Williamsburg.

At 7 o'clock Second Deputy Police Commissioner Bugher gave out a printed list of changes affecting the Detective Bureau at Police Headquarters, including transfers from and to the bureau. The list follows:

Lieut. James McCafferty, temporarily assigned to take charge of the Detective Bureau, to report to the Police Commissioner forthwith. McCafferty takes the place of McLaughlin, ex-Inspector.

Changes in Detective Bureau.

Roosevelt Man Hit.

Patrolman Edmund Leigh, from probation duty in Magistrates' Courts.

Leigh has for a number of years been Magistrate Barlow's probation officer, and is one of the most popular men in the Police Department. He is a graduate of the United States Marine Engineering Corps, and had done able detective work.

Patrolman Michael P. Fursillo, from the East Thirty-fifth Street Station.

Crush at Police Headquarters.

Police Headquarters was a busy place last night. In the Detective Bureau, in the corridors, in Mulberry Street, and standing around the corners were hundreds of Lieutenants, Sergeants, and others who while waiting for orders formed what they called "The Know Nothing Squad."

In outlying precincts, according as telephone messages came into the station houses for So-and-So to proceed to Police Headquarters forthwith, new entanglements arose.

Acting Inspector Joseph Burns, who is said to have the backing of Percy Nagle, was an early arrival at Police Headquarters last night. He declined to discuss police matters. It was noteworthy that Burns will now have under his command in the Third Inspection District three former Inspectors, McClusky, Stephen O'Brien, and Kane.

Adam A. Cross, who was reduced to a Captain and sent to the Hamburg Avenue Station, Brooklyn, being relieved of the Inspectorship of the Borough of Brooklyn, was one of the first of the reduced Inspectors to call at Police Headquarters last night.

Capt. Cross was asked if he cared to say what, if anything, he proposed to do about it. He would not answer. Neither would McClusky, Grant, or McDonald.

James Kane, deposed Inspector, when he went to the West Twentieth Street Station last night, said he was satisfied.

JUSTICE SAYS FRAUD.

Sends Papers in Zuckerman Suit to the District Attorney.

Supreme Court Justice Leventritt decided yesterday to send the papers in an action brought before him by Joseph Zuckerman against his former partner, Isaac Rabham, to the District Attorney for investigation. The two men composed the firm of Rabham & Zuckerman, manufacturers of cloaks and suits. They dissolved partnership in 1906, but Zuckerman brought an action to have the agreement under which the partnership was dissolved set aside, alleging that he was induced to sign it by false and fraudulent representations.

In the course of the trial several statements made by the members of the firm to the Dun Mercantile Agency, to Bradstreet's, and to firms supplying the firm of Rabham & Zuckerman with goods were read in evidence. These statements, it was said, were false, and were made for the purpose of obtaining extended credit. Justice Leventritt declared that it was an unexampled case of effrontery for the plaintiff to come into a court of equity and seek relief. He added:

"These people ought to be held accountable beyond the portals of this court for their attempted fraud, practiced by both of them upon the mercantile community, so I propose to send the record in this case to the District Attorney, and I propose to call it to the attention of the Merchants' Association, which has been properly organized for the purpose of frustrating just such attempted frauds and cheats as these people were practicing at the time of their dissolution."

A representative of the District Attorney called on the Justice, and after examining the proofs promised to report the case fully to Mr. Jerome.

DEADLOCKS OVER SENATORS.

Third Joint Ballot in Wisconsin; Fifty-sixth Ballot in Rhode Island.

MADISON, Wis., April 19.—The third joint ballot in the Wisconsin Legislature to-day for United States Senator resulted in no choice. There was practically no change in the previous votes. Following is the vote: Republicans—Cooper, 19; Esch, 18; Lenroot, 18; Stephenson, 19; Hatten, 16; Baensch, 6; Winkler, 3; Hudnall, 1; Bird, Democrat, 18; Rummel, Social-Democrat, 4; Thompson, Social-Democrat, 1.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 19.—On the fifty-sixth ballot for the election of a United States Senator in the Senate today Representative Latham of Cranston, who since the first ballot has been the single supporter of ex-Gov. Utter, announced his vote for Wetmore. The vote to-day stood: Goddard, 41; Colt, 38; Wetmore, 31.

The Legislature will adjourn on Tuesday next, and it appeare probable that a United States Senator will not be elected at this session. It is understood that only one more ballot will be taken before final adjournment.

PLAN TO WIN OUT IN APPORTIONMENT

Republicans Seek to Safeguard Their Power Under New Arrangement of Districts.

NEW BILL INTRODUCED

ALBANY, April 19.—While leaders all over the State, and legislators in general, are exercised over the new reapportionment of Senatorial districts, which now is regarded as inevitable in view of the recent decision by the Court of Appeals upsetting the apportionment of 1906, a bill was introduced in the Senate to-day which is regarded in many quarters as providing a safeguard against attacks on any reapportionment scheme that may be railroaded through the Legislature in its closing moments with a view of protecting the present powers of the leaders.

That such a safeguard is planned the machine Republicans in the Senate has been frankly admitted by Senator Raines and other influential Republicans in the upper house. They believe that a construction may be put on the opinions handed down by the Judges of the Court of Appeals with their decision which may render such a scheme safe. But with all that a distinct danger to its success has existed in the attitude of Secretary of State Whalen, who is a Democrat, and in a sense has the election machinery of the State in his hands, and of Attorney General Jackson, who went out of his way almost at the moment he took office to attack the constitutionality of the apportionment of 1906, which the Republican leaders hope to re-enact with only such changes as have been rendered mandatory through the Court of Appeals decision.

The bill was introduced by Senator Cobb of Jefferson. It provides that whenever an apportionment shall be made by the Legislature or any other body it may be reviewed by the Supreme Court on the suit of any citizen. If the apportionment is by the Legislature, as it must be in the case of Senate districts, the bill directs that it shall be reviewed by the Appellate Division of the Third Department, which meets in Albany, and that in the case of apportionments made by other bodies it shall be reviewed in the first instance by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the department within which such locality is situated. The bill then goes on:

The application shall be in the form of a proceeding for peremptory mandamus, but it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that the officer against whom the mandamus issues has refused to perform any act, and there shall be a presumption that in the absence of a judicial decision to the contrary he will otherwise treat the apportionment attacked as valid and binding upon him in the performance of the duties of his office. If the apportionment attacked be by the Legislature the proceeding for a mandamus shall be against the Secretary of State; if the apportionment attacked be by any other body than the Legislature the proceeding for a mandamus shall be against such officers as the rules and practice of the court requires or shall hereafter require.

It was pointed out here to-day that if the Cobb bill were passed it would be possible for any one who, for some reason, was anxious that the reapportionment plan now contemplated should remain in force, to attack its constitutionality by some action in the courts which would place the Secretary of State in a position where, as defendant in mandamus proceedings, he would be compelled to uphold the other contention that the law was constitutional. Under the provisions of the bill, such an action could be brought at any time without any affirmative act on the part of the Secretary of State as basis for the proceedings.

District Attorney General Decker, who assisted Attorney General Jackson in the proceedings before the Court of Appeals which led to the old apportionment being declared unconstitutional, said to-day that it was one of the most peculiar bills he had ever had called to his attention.

"It is the first time, as far as I know," said Mr Decker, "that any attempt has been made to enact legislation to base an action at law on the presumption or expectation of what a person may do. It is also the first time, as far as I am aware, that the Legislature has sought to forestall the act of an elective officer before it is known what he intends to do. The purpose of this bill is too obvious to require any extended comment."

In the Attorney General's office it was said that despite this obvious attempt to prevent a proper court review of the proposed apportionment there would undoubtedly be some way of getting the matter before the courts.

WOMEN TEACHERS COMPLAIN.

Say Men Misrepresented Facts at Legislative Hearing.

A statement was given out yesterday by the Executive Committee of the Interborough Association of Women Teachers as to the hearing in Albany on Thursday on the Salary bill.

"The Association of Men Teachers and Principals," says the statement, "has prepared and sent out for publication a schedule of figures attempting to prove that according to the White bill, an unequal distribution of the increases will be given to the women teachers above the 4A grades.

"The facts are these: There are at present 986 high school teachers in Greater New York. Of these there are 49 first assistants, with maximums as stated. The remaining 730 teachers, known as juntors and assistants, have maximums of $1,900 for women and $2,400 for men. The intent to deceive is evident when the salaries of 49 members of the corps are given as those of the whole 986 members. The Chicago maximum for both men and women is $2,000. Considering the cost of living in New York, these figures carry their own commentary and conviction."

Long Sault Company Bill Passed.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 19.—The Assembly today passed the O'Neil-Merritt Long Sault Development Company bill. Only Majority Leader Moreland and Foley of Niagara voted against it. There were thirty members in their seats when the Senate bill came over in a batch of messages from the Senate. Merritt quickly moved to substitute it for his, which was on the calendar. No objection was made, and he moved the bill to final passage. Had the point of order been raised that a quorum was not present the bill could not have been considered. The measure now goes to the Governor.

PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Tentative Agreement Reached—Nicaraguans to Quit Honduras.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—A tentative agreement which will probably end the Central American war has, according to advices received to-day, been arranged between Nicaragua and Salvador.

Orders have been issued for the withdrawal of all Nicaraguan troops from Honduras, and the peace negotiations are proceeding with every prospect of successful fruition within a brief time.

Minister Corea of Nicaragua had a conference to-day with Assistant Secretary of State Bacon, at which he communicated to him cablegrams which he had received from his Government indicating that the conference between the Ministers of Foreign Affairs now being held on Tigre Island has proceeded far enough to show that several clauses of the peace agreement have been decided upon. The Ministers, according to Señor Corea's advices, are communicating with their Governments as to the terms of the agreement.

As he left the State Department Minister Corea said it was not unlikely he would receive word in a few hours that the peace agreement had been concluded finally.

MEXICO CITY, April 19.—Ex-President Manuel Bonilla of Honduras will arrive here to-morrow or Sunday morning. He is in Las Esperanzas at present.

The story published in an afternoon paper here that Bonilla had gone to Coatzacoalcos to hoard a ship for Belize, where he intended to reorganize his army, is without foundation.

BLOCKING FORAKER'S PLANS.

Frank Hitchcock Is in Georgia Lining Up for Roosevelt.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 19.—The answer of President Roosevelt to the formation of the Georgia State League under the fostering care of Senator Foraker came in the visit of Assistant Postmaster General Frank Hitchcock to Georgia.

Hitchcock has held conferences in Atlanta and in Macon with the leading Republicans of the State, and the object of these meetings was to fight the effort of Foraker to control the Georgia vote. While in Atlanta a conference was held in the office of State Marshal Walter Johnson, at which Hitchcock, Johnson, and, in fact, all the local Federal officials were present. It is understood that the regular party men will give all their influenes to Roosevelt.

WADSWORTH STARTS FIGHT.

His Follower to Contest with a Porter Man for the Judgeship.

Special to The New York Times.

LOCKPORT, April 19.—With the announcement from District Attorney Burt G. Stockwell to-night that he is in the race for the nomination for the County Judgeship against the incumbent, Charles Hickey, comes the signal for the first blow to be struck by the forces of ex-Representative James W. Wadsworth to regain control in Western New York. Stockwell enters the race with the backing of the Wadsworth forces, while Hickey is the recently elected Niagara leader of the Hughes-Stevens-Porter faction.

It is learned to-night that ex-Senator Irving L'Hommedieu of Orleans, who delivered that county's delegates to Wadsworth last Fall and was later turned down for his own renomination in the famous seven-day deadlocked convention, is a candidate for the place of Revenue Collector for Western New York. MANILA IS SHAKEN; ALSO CHARLESTON

Severe Shocks in Two Towns of Southern Luzon—Buildings Destroyed.

EARTHQUAKE IN ALGERIA

Lives Lost in Mexico Believed to be Less Than 100, but Property Loss is Very Great.

MANILA, April 19.—Earth shocks were felt here at intervals for three hours early this morning. Three of the shocks were severe, but the majority were very light.

Reports received here from the southern part of the Island of Luzon announce that there were severe earthquakes at Nueva Caceres, Camarines Province, and at Tayabas, sixty-two miles southeast of Manila. Buildings were destroyed in both places, but no loss of life has been reported up to the present.

Communication with the two towns mentioned is affected.

ORAN, Algeria, April 19.—A telegram received here from Mostaganem, forty-five miles northeast of Oran, says a severe earth shock was felt in that region at 9:40 P. M.

The message makes no mention of casualties or damage.

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 19.—An earthquake shock was felt here at 8:30 o'clock this morning. It rattled windows and woke up a number of persons, but did no damage. The shock was accompanied by a puff of wind. The undulatory motion was apparently from southeast to northwest.

A rumbling sound was heard during and after the shock, which lasted from eight to ten seconds.

At Summerville, a Winter resort twenty miles distant, the shock was more distinctly felt than here, and in some houses ornaments were shaken from mantels.

MEXICO CITY, April 19.—Communication has now been opened with all the important points in the section most affected by the earthquakes. The latest reports indicate that the loss of life will not reach 100, but many persons have been injured and the property loss is very great.

Vice President Corral in a communication published here to-day, declares that the whole of the State of Guerrero has been devastated.

At Ayutla seven persons were buried under wreckage and killed. None of the killed was prominent. The wounded number thirty-seven. Many buildings were thrown down, and those which are still standing are in danger of falling. None of the houses is habitable, and the citizens are camped under improvised tents. The loss is estimated at approximately $200,000.

Thousands of dollars are being subscribed to the fund being raised in this city for the relief of the earthquake sufferers.

POTSDAM, April 19.—The seismograph of the Geodetic Institute last night again registered two violent earth shocks, estimated to have occurred about 8,000 miles from here.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Two feeble earthquake shocks were recorded by the seismograph at the Weather Bureau yesterday afternoon. The first shock began at 4:35 P. M., and ended about 5:35 P. M. The strongest motion was from 5:11 to 5:18.

The second, and slightly more severe, shock began at 7:49 P. M. and ended at 8:40 P. M. The strongest motion was between 8:05 and 8:07 P. M.

Private messages received in this city yesterday from business interests in the territory affected by the earthquakes in Mexico show that these interests suffered no damage at La Dicha in the State of Guerrero. Extensive business interests in which Americans are concerned and employed at Marques, although it is only about twelve miles from Acapulco, escaped damage.

As there was no loss of life at La Dicha or Marques the alarm felt as to the safety of American mining engineers in that district was apparently unwarranted.

It is a striking and curious fact that while San Franciscans were celebrating their recovery from the California earthquake of precisely a year ago there comes news of the frightful convulsion which shook Mexico on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, destroying a number of cities and many lives. It is even more remarkable that the Mexican earthquake was followed on Wednesday by shocks in Spain, Turkey, and Transcaucasia, and yesterday by disastrous shocks in the Philippines and a slight shock in Charleston, S. C.

The recurrence of seismic disturbances exactly a year after the California disaster is probably no more than a coincidence. As a matter of fact, there had already occurred within the year two other great convulsions, namely, at Valparaiso, Chile, Aug. 16, 1906, and at Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 15, 1907.

The close synchronism between shocks so far separated in location as Mexico, Spain, Turkey, and the Philippines tends, however, to give the impression of more than a coincidence. It was a practical demonstration of the sympathetic alertness of the earth's crust that before they had heard of the catastrophe in Mexico the seismograph observers at Albany Washington, Berlin, Trieste, and Vienna had reported that an earthquake had occurred—the Viennese observer adding "at a point 6,500 miles from the Austrian capital."

The vibrations of the great Martinique cataclysm were felt half-way around the globe, and when Krakatoa blew up twenty years ago the great waves to which it gave rise beat on the Pacific shores of America.

It is one thing, of course, to detect on the seismograph record faint signs of a far-off earthquake, and another to have simultaneous convulsions of equal violence in three continents. The earthquake record of the past six days includes:

Destructive shocks at Chilpancingo, Chilapa, and Ayutla, Mexico, April 14, 15, and 16.

Tidal wave at Acapulo, west coast of Mexico, April 16.

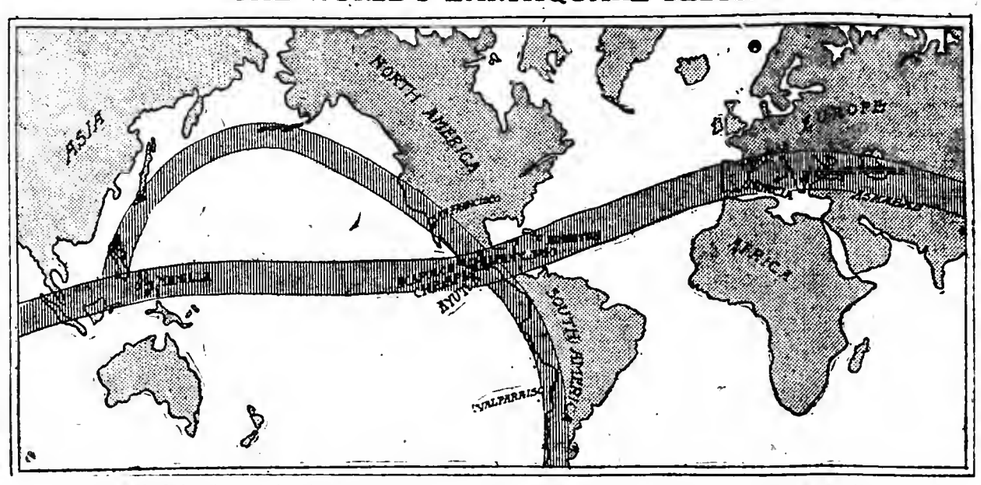
It is possible that some deep and far-reaching dislocation of rock in the earth's bosom might produce earthquakes in lands so widely separated. There are no records of synchronizing earthquakes to sustain this hypothesis, but the possibility now suggested will undoubtedly be considered and investigated. In the present case, it is true, the Mexican disturbances are by the inhabitants connected with the condition of Mount Colima, the terrible volcano, which is now active. Its activity has never before been simultaneous with earthquakes. An earthquake resulting from volcanic disturbance would be local. Only some more deeply seated cause could disturb the earth's crust at far-separated points.

There is no generally accepted theory of earthquakes. As to one point only is there agreement—and this is not universal—namely, as to the existence of two earthquake belts—lines of weakness in the earth's crust. These belts are shown in the accompanying map, and it will be observed that all the points from which disturbances are this week reported are situated upon one or the other of them.

THE WORLD'S EARTHQUAKE BELTS.



Within the shaded strips are the places, with the exception of Charleston, affected by recent seismic disturbances.

PARIS STRIKE SPREADING.

Cooks Joining the Waiters — Hotel Servants May Go Out.

Republican Guards were stationed before most of the cafés to-day in order to prevent violence.

Hail Falls in Berlin.

FOOD.

WOULDN'T GO BACK

To Old Days of Coffee Misery for Millions.

A N. Y. lady is emphatic about coffee, and in comparing her former condition when using it, with her later improvement under Postum Food Coffee, says:

"We have used Postum instead of coffee for the past four years, and have been greatly benefited by the change.

"I have always had a weak stomach from childhood, and about five years ago one doctor told me I must leave off coffee entirely. I thought I could not, but tried it for a few mornings, using cocoa in its place, but tired of it.

"Then I went back to coffee and kept getting worse, until my stomach was unable to hold or digest much of anything.

"One day I got hold of a little booklet, 'The Road to Wellville.' I read it, and decided to try Postum.

"I got better as time went on, and we all learned to like it so well that now we use it to the exclusion of everything else in the line of drink at table.

"This Summer I went away for two weeks, and my husband took his meals at the restaurant. As he did not drink coffee he asked for Postum. They brought it to him, 'pale, weak stuff,' made in a hurry.

"But the first morning after I returned home he said, 'Oh, it seems good to have a cup of Postum that's made right'! At the restaurant, he said, they did not boil it long enough. (Postum must be well boiled to get the delicious flavor—see directions.)

"I would not use coffee again and go back to the old days of suffering for millions. I have a friend who drank Postum for two weeks, during a siege of typhoid fever, the only nourishment she took in all that time, and she came out all right. I would be willing to give $1.00 a box for Postum rather than use coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

3 WOMEN CRAZED BY GRIEF AT ONCE

Mother, Wife, and Sister of a Political Prisoner Go Insane in St. Petersburg.

CONVICTS BEING TORTURED

Duma to Interpellate the Government —Dr. Kennard Says 20,000,000 Russians Are Famine-stricken.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 19.—Three women were arrested in the Baltic Railroad station here to-day while in the act of throwing handfuls of gold coin about the waiting room. An examination brought out the fact that they were demented by grief.

They are respectively the mother, wife, and sister of a political prisoner who was brought here to-day in chains from Riga. Worry over the fate of their relative unhinged their minds.

The lower house of Parliament to-day adopted unanimously an interpellation of the Government in regard to the allegation that political prisoners in the prison at Akatul, Trans-Baikal Territory, had been beaten and tortured. The charges were based on a letter from Sassonoff, the assassin of Interior Minister de Plehve, who is undergoing fourteen years' imprisonment in the Akatul mines.

LONDON, April 19.—Writing from the Russian famine district, Dr. Kennard, who was sent by the Society of Friends to investigate conditions among the peasantry, draws an appalling picture of the suffering. After calling attention to the urgent and immediate need of funds, he says:

"This is the worst famine Russia has known. No less than 20,000,000 people distributed throughout the Southeastern Provinces cannot live without aid to see another harvest, and I may say that this figure has been not only approved by the Zemstvo organization, but also by the Government itself. The date of the harvest will vary with the latitude, and the famine-stricken region is spread over such a wide area (five times the size of France) that more than ten degrees of latitude are involved. This means that in direct proportion from south to north the harvest will be from July 3 to 23, (new style.)

"It will be seen that funds will be needed to the end of July to feed all these millions, and then the harvest will bring relief, but there are many hundreds of thousands to whom the harvest will not bring relief, for they have neither land nor cattle."

Dr. Kennard makes an urgent appeal for tinned milk and for tinned meats and meat juices. He says: "I have seen the Zemstvo workers and investigated their methods, and can vouch for it that not only is the work being carried out in a businesslike and capable manner, but that the most is made out of every farthing."

CHINESE FAMINE WORSE.

Many Dying — $55,000 More Cabled from This Country Yesterday.

SHANGHAI, April 19.—The following are extracts from reports just received from foreigners in four famine centres:

Su-Chien—Almost out of supplies. Need large amounts immediately to continue the relief commenced.

Lu-Kia-Wie-Tse—The whole country is in the deepest distress. Refugees who went south hoping to find relief are returning empty handed. There are processions of persons with wheelbarrows, transporting their doors, tables, beds, and cupboards to market, to be sold for almost nothing. Hundreds of women and children are seen in the fields, scratching out roots and scanty blades of grass. Hundreds of trees have been stripped of their bark from the roots to the tips of the highest branches for use as food. The majority of the population are living on wild roots, &c., which is causing disease.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—A contribution of $50,000 was received to-day from The Christian Herald of New York by the American National Red Cross, to be applied to the relief of the famine sufferers in China.

The amount, together with $5,000 received by the Red Cross from contributors throughout the country, was cabled to-day to China. This remittance makes $220,000 in money that has been forwarded from this country for Chinese famine relief.

QUEEN HELENA'S ILLNESS.

Condition of Italian Ruler's Wife Complicated by Fever.

ROME, April 19.—The indisposition of Queen Helena, which prevented her from going to meet King Edward and Queen Alexandra, continues.

The Queen's condition is complicated by fever.

FIRE DESTROYS ILOILO.

MANILA, April 19.—The town of Iloilo, Island of Panay, was destroyed by fire this morning, with the result that 20,000 persons are homeless.

As this dispatch is filed the conflagration is still raging, and, owing to the heavy wind blowing, it is beyond control. The civil and military authorities are doing everything possible to check the flames and assist the sufferers.

No estimate has as yet been made of the amount of damage done and no details of the fire are obtainable, owing to communication with Iloilo being seriously affected.

Iloilo is the capital of the province of that name in the Island of Panay of the Visayas group. It was an open port, and commercially important under the Spaniards. It had a cathedral, a seminary, a Court House, and other public buildings. The population in 1903 was about 19,000.

TYPHOON KILLS 230.

Ululthi Group in the Caroline Islands Devastated.

BERLIN, April 19.—Colonial Director Dernburg informed the Budget Committee of the Reichstag to-day that a cable message had been received from the Governor of the Island of Yap announcing that a disastrous typhoon swept over the Caroline Islands on March 29 and that 230 of the 800 natives of the Ululthi group were drowned.

Cocoanut trees were destroyed and famine threatened the surviving natives. The steamer Planet of the Germany Navy, which had been engaged in geodetic work, and the steamer Germania of the Jaluit Company, proceeded to the Ululthi Islands, taking food and help.

It is proposed to take as many of the suffering natives as possible to the Pelew and Mariana (or Ladrone) Islands.

IRISH LAND BILL PASSED.

Commone Approve Measure Providing for Compulsory Purchase.

LONDON, April 19.—By a vote of 208 to 60 the House of Commons to-day passed the second reading of the bill, introduced by the Nationalist Party, amending the Irish Land act. Under the bill the power of the Land Commiselonere to acquire estates, sell them to tenants and provide the purchase money is extended, so that they can compulsorily buy out such landlords as Lord Clanricarde and others who refuse to sell. The Commissioners will be empowered to fix the price of estates to be so acquired.

The Unionists opposed the measure, which they described as being "purc confiscation."

The Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Cherry, on behalf of the Government, approved the principle of the measure, but said that in consequence of the congestion of business, it could not become law in the course of the present session of Parliament.

Mikado to Receive Gen. Booth.

TOKIO, April 19.—The Emperor has joined in the popular welcome to Gen. Booth of the Salvation Army, and will receive him in special audience to-morrow.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

PARIS, April 19.—Brazil's announcement that her treaty with France of 1826, concerning commerce, navigation, and the jurisdiction of Consuls, will be denounced after July 13, though unexpected, is considered in diplomatic quarters to have arisen merely from the desire of Brazil to readjust her system of internal jurisdiction and is not regarded as likely to create any difficulties between the two countries.

TANGIER, April 19.—The commanders of the French cruisers Lalande and Forbin report that all is quiet at Mogador, Safi, Mazagan, and Casablanca.

ROME, April 19.—Mr. and Mrs. Wayne MacVeagh and their daughter were received by Queen Margherita in private audience to-day. When Mr. MacVeagh was Ambassador to Italy ten years ago he occupied the palace where Queen Margherita now lives.

GUAYAQUIL, April 19.—President Alfaro officially received the new American Minister, William C. Fox, yesterday afternoon in the presence of the Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, the Consuls, and the members of the Supreme Court of Justice. The route from the American Legation to the Presidential palace was lined with troops.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 19.—The ceremonies attending the inauguration of Gov. Post, who succeeds Beekman Winthrop, ended last night with a grand ball at the theatre, which was crowded. The Governor and Mrs. Post led the grand march.

TOKIO, April 19.—The Emperor has appointed M. Tsuzuki, Chief Secretary of the Privy Council, to be a member of the House of Peers and head of the Japanese delegation to the Peace Conference at The Hague.

GOV. SWETTENHAM OBEYED AND QUIT

Apologized to Admiral Davis and the Same Day Resigned His Post.

LETTERS ARE PUBLISHED

But the English White Paper Does Not Give the Correspondence with the Mayor of Kingston.

LONDON, April 19.—A White Paper issued this evening contains a portion of the correspondence relating to the resignation of Sir Alexander Swettenham as Governor of Jamaica. It gives verbatim the letters of Rear Admiral Davis and Sir Alexander and the cable comment of the Colonial Secretary, Lord Elgin.

The Governor's letter to Admiral Davis, as cabled by himself to Lord Elgin, contains two or three verbal differences from the version which was published. There is only one of any importance. Toward the end of Sir Alexander Swettenham's version he says: "I believe that the police surveillance of no city is adequate to protect private property," and apparently as an example of this inadequacy Sir Alexander refers to the pillaging of a millionaire's house in New York.

Lord Elgin telegraphed to the Governor on Jan. 22:

"If such a letter is correctly attributed to you I must observe that both in tone and expression it is highly improper, and especially unbecoming to his Majesty's representative in addressing an officer of a friendly power engaged on an errand of mercy. I must further require you to withdraw forthwith and unreservedly any such letter and to express your regret for having written it. Your withdrawal should be telegraphed to me at once, when it will be transmitted to the Government of the United States through the proper channels."

On Jan. 24 the Governor cabled to the Colonial Secretary asking that the following be transmitted to Admiral Davis:

"At the instance of the Secretary of State for the Colonies I desire to fully and unreservedly withdraw my letter of Jan. 18 and to express my regret that I wrote it."

On the same date the Governor cabled to Lord Elgin as follows:

"I respectfully apply for permission to retire on account of age forthwith and to be relieved."

The letter of the Mayor of Kingston to Admiral Davis and the latter's reply, which are being especially called for by the House of Commons, are not published.

NEW BELGIAN MINISTRY.

M. de Troos Succeeds in Forming One —King to Visit Falliéres.

BRUSSELS, April 19.—The ministerial crisis is considered to be over for the present, M. de Troos, the Minister of the Interior, having succeeded in obtaining acceptances for all the portfolios. The names of the ministers have not yet been announced, but they will be submitted to King Leopold to-morrow, when the formation of a new ministry is almost certain.

The King's acceptance of M. de Troos as Premier indicates the continuance of a conservative policy, but on more democratic lines than hitherto.

The King intends to leave Brussels for Paris on Sunday on a visit to President Falliéres.

STEINWAY PIANOS

The international leadership of the Steinway among pianos is not the result of accident; it is the reward of over half a century of unparalleled effort, backed by creative genius. While others are only following and imitating, the Steinways are always leading and creating.

The newest evidence of this is the Steinway Vertegrand at $500, the standard for all uprights.

Pianos of all makes taken in exchange. Time payments if desired. Also pianos for rent.

ALBERTA MINERS OUT.

May Not Heed Mitchell's Order to Return to Work.

WINNIPEG, April 19.—Reports from the coal districts of Alberta show that with but few exceptions every miner is out. John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers, has wired to President Sherman of the British Columbia and Alberta unions ordering the men back to work, but it is said that the men will refuse to act on these instructions.

The situation throughout the West is said to be critical, and already the Canadian Pacific Railroad has confiscated several cars of coal along its system to keep the engines running.

ROUMANIAN-MAGYAR TROUBLE

Hungarian Judge Killed by Peasants—Notary's House Burned.

VIENNA, April 19.—The anti-Magyar movement is spreading and growing in intensity in some of the districts of Hungary inhabited jointly by Roumanians and Magyars. The movement is an outcome of jealousies and racial feeling aroused by the aggression of the Magyars, who seek to dominate the situation, politically and otherwise.

A Hungarian Judge has been killed by Roumanian peasants in the village of Szelecske.

Roumanian peasants have burned down the residence in the village of Lopanncy of a Hungarian Notary named Pap. The notary, however, escaped into a Magyar district.

These attacks have aroused considerable resentment among the Hungarians.

SUIT AGAINST THE POPE.

ROME, April 19.—The heirs of the late Father Marcello Massarenti have brought a lawsuit against the Pope, serving papers upon Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State, as his representative.

They claim part of his fortune, most of which was derived from the sale of his famous art collection to an American.

MUTUAL TRUSTEES DECLARED ELECTED

THE AWARD TO BE OPPOSED

Untermyer Calls Canvass a Travesty and Says the Legislature Will Be Asked to Upset It.

The Inspectors of Election in the Mutual Life Insurance Company gave to President Charles A. Peabody yesterday their official certificate showing the result of the election in the company according to the canvass made by them. As forecast by the Inspectors some time before the count was over, the certificate gave the election to the administration Trustees, including the four members of the International Committee who were nominated against their will, by a large vote.

The highest vote cast for any Trustee was that for Cyrus W. Curtis, who received 189,152 votes. The vote of Hamilton McK. Twombly, who declined to serve if elected, was somewhat below that of the other administration candidates. With the exception of Mr. Twombly, the administration Trustees received from 185,000 to 189,000 votes apiece, whereas the candidates on the United Committee's ticket received from 63,000 to 68,000 votes apiece, according to the official canvass.

The announcement of the result drew from Samuel Untermyer the declaration that the canvass was a farce. In support of this, Mr. Untermyer gave out figures showing that of the administration votes 159,359 were "Peabody ballots" and 15,320 official ballots. The "Peabody ballots" were the ones with which the agents of the company made their house-to-house canvass, and in the collection of which the International Committee charges that thousands of forgeries were committed in practically every State in the Union. Mr. Untermyer said that when the hearing takes place on the bill now pending at Albany to correct some of the defects in the present laws governing insurance elections on Wednesday of next week the International Committee, which proposes to keep up its fight, will ask the Legislature to order a new election on account of the methods that were used in this one. The bill referred to provides among other things that only official ballots will be valid in the future.

Peabody on the Election.

President Peabody said yesterday that the four members of the International Committee who are elected—namely, Judge George Gray of Delaware, Col. Alfred M. Shook, Harlow N. Higginbotham, and Gen. Benjamin F. Tracy—will all serve. Officials of the International Committee were of the contrary opinion. The new board will meet on next Tuesday to elect officers. When President Peabody was asked yesterday if he would be a candidate for re-election he replied:

"I am not a candidate in the sense that I am seeking re-election. I have not spoken to a single trustee regarding the matter."

The election, including the $35-a-day canvassers, is said to have cost the policy holders about $500,000, the cost of inspection of the vote alone, according to conservative figures, being placed as high as $75,000.

In addition to the declaration by President Peabody that he would serve again as President if the trustees insisted upon it, a statement given out by Samuel Untermyer, counsel for the International Policy Holders' Committee, that an effort is being made in the Legislature to correct the evils that were disclosed at the recent election was perhaps the most interesting disclosure that was made incidental to the announcement of the official certification of the election of the administration's trustees. The matter of charges which were made about two weeks ago by George R. Scrugham, manager of the International Policy Holders' Committee, that certain of the ballots cast for the administration's trustees had been forged, is now in the hands of District Attorney Jerome.

When President Peabody was asked about these allegations of fraudulent ballots made by Mr. Scrugham, he picked up a memorandum and read off denials and explanations of a few.

In the case of David Krebs, for whom, as charged in the statement of Mr. Scrugham, a forged Peabody ballot had been sent in, Mr. Peabody explained that two ballots had been turned in for him, one a United Committee's ballot, and the other an administration ballot. The administration ballot, Mr. Peabody said, had been found incorrect and had not been counted.

In the case of Ethen L. Reynolds, Mr. Peabody explained, the name on the administration ballot which he had cast had been found to be the same as that signed to the application for a policy in the company, and had therefore been accepted as correct. The same was also true, he said, of the ballot of John E. Schmidt, which was said to have been imperfect, and that too had been accepted as genuine.

The Official Returns.

According to the explanation of Mr. Peabody, the votes in dispute, when they appeared rightly to belong to the International Committee were counted as such. That the administration could easily spare them will appear from the following detailed figures of the vote given out by the company:

Mr. Untermyer's Statement.

The statement by Samuel Untermyer, for the International Policy Holders' Committee, was as follows:

"I am surprised that the Inspectors counted any of the ballots of the Policy Holders' Committee. They might as well have thrown all of them out as do what they did. They rejected genine ballots for our ticket that were supported by affidavits of the policy holders and counted ballots for the Administration ticket that were shown by affadavit to be forgeries. The excuse they made was that they had no right to inquire as to whether the ballots were genuine or forgeries, even where the policy holder whose ballot had been forged offered to prove it. That inquiry is now being conducted by the District Attorney. We have here the anomalous condition of Inspectors having actually counted ballots that were proven to them to be forged, and having rejected the ballots of the same policy holders which they knew to be genuine. It is a queer 'coincidence' that all the genuine ballots thus rejected were in favor of the policy holders' ticket, and all the forged ballots accepted were in favor of the administration ticket.

"Such has been the farcical result of this long and costly canvass under the personal conduct of Supt. Kelsey and his inspectors. The whole performance has been a travesty due to the absurd attitude of the Inspectors and to the defects in the law. Over 92 per cent. of the entire administration vote was handed in in baskets and buadles by agents not on the official ballot, but on the 'Peabody trick ballot.' The figures are as follows:

"So long as the administration is permitted to turn the agency force loose upon the policy holders, there can be no such thing as an honest election. The entire performance is honeycombed with fraud and forgery. We have affidavits from almost every State in the Union showing these forgeries. The International Committee will continue this fight until the policy holders have had an opportunity for the honest expression of their will. Of all the scandals that characterized the present discredited management, the shifts to which they have resorted in this so-called 'election' are the worst.

"An effort is now pending in the Legislature to correct the evils that were disclosed at the recent election. A joint hearing of the Senate and Assembly committees on the bill is to be had on Wednesday of next week. We shall ask the Legislature to order a new election, to provide for an official ballot only, and to especially exclude the agents from participation. There is no hope for the policy holders so long as the paid agents of the officials in the company can use their positions and the money of the company to corrupt these elections."

William C. McMillan, named as one of the thirty-six men elected as Directors of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, died Feb. 21.

THAW'S WIFE WEARY.

Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw told a reporter yesterday afternoon that her one ambition when Thaw is acquitted is to go out West, where she can forget "the eternal dress, dress, dress, that is necessary here."

Throughout the trial of her husband Mrs. Thaw, except on three days when she wore a brown tailor suit, was attired in the school miss's blue dress with white collar and cuffs, which she wore on the stand.

There was very little action in the case yesterday. Thaw was visited by Mr. Hartridge and Mr. Peabody in the morning, and his wife and his sister, Mrs. G. L. Carnegie, also called. None of them had anything to say about their business at the Tombs. Dr. Jelliffe spent three hours with Thaw in the afternoon.

The jury of the late trial will be at the District Attorney's office this morning to tell what they know of the alleged attempt to influence their verdict by a policeman on guard in the Criminal Court Building. They will also meet to-night at the Broadway Central Hotel to dine and talk over the two sleepless nights they spent in the jury room. Wilbur F. Steele called on Mr. Jerome yesterday. He said he came merely to pay his respects, and tell the District Attorney how much he had approved of his summing up.

From Pittsburg comes an authoritative denial that the visit of Mrs. William Thaw to that city has anything to do with the case of her son. It is declared that she has gone there merely to rest. A rumor was current there that she would consult with David T. Watson, the family lawyer, in connection with the new trial. Mr. Watson refused to discuss the matter beyond saying that he hardly expected to see Mrs. Thaw.

THAW'S MOTHER ILL.

Collapses When She Reaches Her Home in Pittsburg.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 19.—When Mrs. William Thaw reached her Pittsburg home to-day she collapsed and physicians were summoned. With her is her daughter, the Countess of Yarmouth. This is the first time the Countess has been in Pittsburg since she left here immediately after her wedding, four years ago.

In anticipation of the arrival of Mrs. Thaw, a representative of the family yesterday requested Superintendent of Police McQuaide to detail men to guard the Thaw residence and keep away cranks.

Josiah Thaw, who accompanied his mother home, was very busy to-day. He went to the Union National Bank this morning, and, after a meeting with J. Denny Lyons, deposited $3,000 to his cash account. Laetr, Mr. Thaw went to the office of Frank Semple, Sr., general agent of the estate of William Thaw. Thaw and Semple were closeted together most of the forenoon, and Semple later admitted that he was going out of the city to-night on a secret mission for the Thaws.

The work of converting part of the fortune of Mrs. William Thaw into cash will, it is stated, begin next Monday. Practically every piece of property owned outright by Mrs. Thaw will be sold and the money received pooled into a fund for bail for Harry K. Thaw.

BANK SAFES DYNAMITED.

Robbers Get Away with Booty in Illinois and Indian Territory.

PEORIA, Ill., April 19.—Safe blowers blew open the safe of the Bank of Weston at Weston, Ill., fifty miles east of this city, early to-day with three separate charges of dynamite. About $2,000 was obtained by the robbers, who then escaped after keeping the entire town in a state of terror for more than an hour.

TULSA, Indian Territory, April 19.—Robbers early to-day dynamited the safe of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank at Bixby, Indian Territory, twenty miles south of here, obtained several thousand dollars in currency, and escaped, leaving no clue.

MARRIAGE NOT VOID.

Appellate Division Reverses Lower Court in Mrs. Stein's Suit.

The Appellate Division yesterday reversed a judgment sustaining a demurrer in a suit brought by Edith C. Stein against James Dunne, a lawyer, for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff sued for $50,000 damages. In his answer, besides setting up a denial of an engagement, Mr. Dunne alleged that the plaintiff had married one Julius Stein and that their wedding had not been set aside.

The plaintiff answered that, although she went through a marriage ceremony in January, 1900, with Mr. Stein, he had a wife living, and consequently her marriage was void. To this reply the defendant demurred, and Supreme Court Justice Newburger sustained his demurrer. This ruling is set aside by the decision of the Appellate Division.

Cowboy Held for Freight Robberies.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 19.—Leroy Taylor, the cowboy who is wanted for "shooting up" Montowese and North Haven, was again in the City Court today, the charge being that he had plundered freight cars. He was held in $2,000 for a hearing. The police have recovered goods worth $3,500 at the little house occupied by Taylor, in which his wife lies ill with pneumonia. The police believe that Taylor is one of a gang of men who for some time have been breaking into freight cars in the Cedar Hill yards.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS ON COUNTRY ESTATES

To the person who has always lived in the city, the hugaboo of country life is the necessary giving up of many of the luxuries and even conveniences of the city.

A well and an uncertain windmill replace the municipal water supply. The kerosene lamp is a poor substitute for the electric light. All these inconveniences are avoided in the Belle Terre Estates, where a central water plant furnishes chemically pure water and at fire pressure all over the estates.

A general electric plant provides light and power for all purpoaes. Added to these useful features are the fifty miles of woodland drives and bridle paths, golf links, tennis courts, bowling green, yachting privileges in the best of harbors, and every other possible adjunct of deligbtful country life, including the most elaborate Clubhouse on Long Island. The property will be ready about May 1st.

WANTS A RECEIVER FOR MUTUAL RESERVE

Western Policy Holder Alleges the Concern's Income Has Been Wasted.

CALLS THE REPORT FALSE

Complainant Says Company's True Financial Condition Was Misrepresented in Its Annual Statement.

A bill of complsint asking for the appointment of a receiver for the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of 309 Broadway was filed yesterday in the United States Circuit Court by William Hepburn Russell, the lawyer, representing Reuben O. Scovill of Kankakee, Ill., a policy holder in the Mutual Reserve Company. Although only Mr. Scovill is named as complainant, it is understood that a pool of policy holders has been formed to try to throw the insurance company into the hands of a receiver.

A hearing on the complaint in the near future has been asked for, and Mr. Russell expects a temporary receiver to be named in a few weeks. Charges of a grave nature are made in the bill of complaint against the present officers of the company. Many of them are based upon evidence which came out when the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company were investigated by the Armstrong Committee. It is alleged in the bill that the company is bankrupt and that its true financial standing has been concealed by the officials of the concern.

Charges Against Officials.

The company's President, Frederick A. Burnham, who, with the Vice-President, George D. Eldridge, is under indictment, is accused in the complaint of having diverted the funds of the company for his own private ends. It also sets forth that the president, vice-president and directors of the company have from year to year "voted and appropriated for themselves large, excessive and extravagant salaries, percentages, commissions and other emoluments out of the funds contributed by the complainant and other policy holders, and have entered into contract with agents for the payment of commissions and in many other ways have misappropriated the funds and have dissipated a large part thereof."

The bill goes on to state that the officers and directors paid $134,000 to the widow of E. B. Harper, the former president, on account of an alleged interest in a certain commission contract, for which the Mutual Reserve Fund Association, which was absorbed by the respondent, was not responsible.

It also accuaea President Burnham and his associates of having manipulated the affairs of the company so that all members of the association were prevented from voting on the policy of the company, thus bringing about a three-man control of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company. The complainant protests against the continued control by the present officials of the company and sets forth many reasons why they should be enjoined from operating the concern any longer on its present basis.

It is said in the bill of complaint that Burnham and his associates have altered the constitution and bylaws of the concern so that while they appear to give the policy holders the power to control they really do nothing of the kind, and that they are so worded that the policy holders have no protection. The assertion is made that the company, through the manipulation of Burnham and the other officials, has "wasted and frittered away large, unnecessary, and excessive sums of money in unwarranted, inequitable, and unmerited claims, and will continue to do so unless prevented by the appointment of receivers.

Over-Assessments Alleged.

Mr. Scovill, the complainant, was a policy holder in the old Northwestern Life Insurance Company, an assessment concern, not unlike the Mutual Reserve. Several years ago, when the Northwestern Company was taken over by the Mutual Reserve, his policy, with others, was transferred to the new company. The amount of his policy is $2,000. He says he has been assessed far beyond the reasonable limits fixed by law, and applies for the return of his overtaxation. In his complaint Mr. Scovill cites what he says is the gradual decline of the Mutual Reserve Company's business, all tending to show its present alleged insolvency.

The complainant says that last December the company's report to the Insurance Department showed that the total liabilities were $4,877,986, while the assets were only $4,982,331. The complainant charges that this report was not only misleading, but was "false and was known to be untrue by the officials at the time it was made." The complaint sets forth that in the report to the Insurance Department the officials put the Mutual Reserve Building at 309 Broadway among the concern's assets. The complaint alleges that it is not an asset at all, but is a constant source of loss to the concern. Although the building was constructed for the Mutual Reserve Company, it is owned by a construction company, and is rented by the life insurance company.

The complaint says that a large number of suits are now pending against the company in various parts of the country. It estimates the number of Mutual Reserve policy holders at 50,000. A large part of these were stockholders of other insurance concerns, mostly in the West, which became embarrassed and their policy holders were taken over by the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.

Papers in the proceeding asking for a receiver were served yesterday afternoon on Charls W. Camp, Secretary of the company. Later in the afternoon a representative of the insurance concern gave out the following statement on authority of the President: This action brought by Mr. Russell is similar to one which he brought about two years ago. His former attempt was unsuccessful, and we expect this one to be the same. The company will reply to the accusations in the bill of complaint as soon as it learns their exact nature.

Isaac N. Seligman Thinks Small Contracts Should Not Be Revived.

Isaac N. Seligman of the banking house of J. & W. Seligman & Co. made these comments yesterday on the financial aspects of the Public Service Commissions bill.

"I believe public service corporations should have the right to contract for the operation of their works by others without the consent of the commission, provided such contract does not cover more than a limited period of time, say two or three years. The new commission will be very busy in the first few years, and the delays that will result if they must approve every contract made by a gas or electric company or by a railroad affecting franchises, will bear hardly upon the companies. If the commission is given the right at any time, upon proper hearing, to order the cancellation of contracts, the public interests will be amply safeguarded and at the same time the corporations would not be unduly restricted.

"Other provisions of the bill would prohibit an individual or a banking firm in the ordinary course of its business from pledging, without the consent of the commission, more than 10 per cent. of the stock of a public service corporation as security for a loan. Surely no public good can be served by such a prohibition.

"The object of the bill, I take it, is to do away with holding companies as a means of stock watering. Why should there not be excluded from such prohibition the holding of stock by companies, the capital stock of which has been paid at par in cash? Also, the wording of the act would seem to prevent the acquisition by companies now controlling a large majority of the capital stock of a public service company of small amounts of minority stock still outstanding. This is a great hardship to impose upon minority stockholders, depriving them of practically the only market they have for their holdings."

HARRIMAN MUST APPEAR.

Case Against His Former Stenographer Put Over Till Next Week.

The court hearing in the criminal case against Frank Hill, the former stenographer of Edward H. Harriman, on the charge of selling the Sidney Webster letter to a morning newspaper, was again postponed yesterday because of the non-appearance of Mr. Harriman. The hearing was before Magistrate Wahle in the private examination room in the Tombs court, with Assistant District Attorney Krotel ready to prosecute.

Former Magistrate Ommen, Hill's counsel, objected to going on with the case on the ground that he wanted to cross-examine Mr. Hnrriman. Mr. Krotel said the counsel had declined to do this at a previous hearing, but the court held he had a right to cross-examine at any time, and ordered that Mr. Harriman be present at the next hearing, to be held next Tuesday.

Sidney Webster was in court, but was not called to the stand. Hill's counsel asked the court to afford his client relief from what he called the persecution of the Pinkerton detectives, who, he said, were dogging Hill's every footstep, day and night.

Magistrate Wahle said he could not take an uncorroborated statement for the truth of the assertion that Mr. Harriman had hired the detectives, and asked for facts.

Mr. Ommen said he would apply to the Supreme Court for a writ to call off the Pinkertons.

HEARING ON RAILROAD RATES.

Special Examiner Martin S. Decker, for the Inter-State Commerce Commission yeaterday continued the hearing of complaints of discrimination by the Harriman roads against the truckmen in this city. No new testimony was taken, and the examiner instructed counsel on both sides to file briefs with him before May 1.

The next complaint investigated was that of the Cambria Steel Company against the Great Northern Railway Company, alleging the enforcement of unreasonable rates for the transportation of steel rails sixty feet in length on twin cars. The Cambria Steel Company's complaint is based on a shipment of 750 cars of steel rails sixty feet in length from Johnstown, Penn., to Seattle, Washington.

The Great Northern Railway, not being represented at the hearing, it was announced that the testimony taken in support of the complaint would be submitted to the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

Unions In Other Trades Refuse, However, to Aid Painters.

Another appeal was made yesterday to the Consolidated Board of Business Agents at a meeting of the board yesterday in Groll's Hall, 147 East Fifty-third Street, by Victor Buhr, business agent of the Amalgamated Painters' Society, which united with the Brotherhood of Painters in the present strike to order sympathetic strikes of the other trades. He said that the interests of unionism were paramount and that the painters should be supported.

The board contains the representatives of most of the unions under the arbitration plan. It was decided by a vote that the board could not take the action asked for, and Buhr announced that he would make his appeal to the unions individually. A number of strike breakers were put to work at the Plaza Hotel yesterday in place of striking painters.

TO BUILD GARDEN CITIES.

American Association Has Five Sites Under Consideration.

It was announced last night that the Garden Cities Association of America, an organization to encourage and aid corporations in building garden cities for workingmen, had decided to give its support to three movements for this purpose, and is about about to indorse two others. The sites of these cities, it was stated, would not be made public immediately, because the land would be seized by speculators. The three sites are on Long Island, in Virginia, and in Pennsylvania. The other two now under consideration are in Connecticut and New Jersey. The Long Island tract is being developed, and consists of 800 acres. One factory has agreed to move there, and others are considering the matter.

WAR WITH JAPAN NEVER NEAR---ROOT

No Danger of It at Any Time, He Tells International Law Society.

NO STATES RIGHTS ISSUE

WASHINGTON, April 19.—That there was never at any time any danger of war between the United States and Japan growing out of the recent controversy regarding the segregation of Japanese school children in the public schools of San Francisco, was made clear by Secretary Root in an address on "The Real Question Under the Japanese Treaty and the San Francisco School Board Resolution" at the first annual meeting of the American Society of International Law, which convened here to-day for a two days' session.

The question of State rights, Secretary Root declared, was not involved. He said in part:

Mr. Root's Address.

Secretary Root reviewed the events connected with the trouble over Japanese children in the San Francisco schools, and then continued:

"The excitement has now subsided, so that it may be useful to consider what the question really was, not because it is necessary for the purposes of that particular case, but because of its bearing upon cases which may arise in the future under the application of the treaty-making power of the United States to other matters, and in other parts of the National domain.

"It is obvious that three distinct questions were raised by the claim originating with Japan and presented by our National Government to the courts in San Francisco. The first and second were merely questions of construction of the treaty. Was the right to attend the primary schools a right, liberty, or privilege of residence? and, if so, was the limitation of Japanese children to the Oriental school and their exclusion from the ordinary schools a deprivation of that right, liberty, or privilege?

"These questions of construction, and especially the second, are by no means free from doubt; but as they concern only the meaning of a particular clause in a particular treaty they are not of permanent importance, and, the particular occasion for their consideration having passed, they need not now be discussed.

"The other question was whether, if the treaty had the meaning which the Government of Japan ascribed to it, the Government of the United States had the constitutional power to make such a treaty agreement with a foreign nation which should be superior to and controlling upon the laws of the State of California. A correct understanding of that question is of the utmost importance, not merely as regards the State of California, but as regards all States and all citizens of the Union.

"There was a very general misapprehension of what this treaty really undertook to do. It was assumed that in making and assenting to the ratification of the Treaty of 1894 the United States was asserting the right to compel the State of California to admit Japanese children to its schools. No such question was involved. That treaty did not, by any possible construction, assert the authority of the United States to compel any State to maintain public schools, or to extend the privileges of its public schools to Japanese children or to the children of any alien residents.

What the Treaty Did Assert.

"The treaty did assert the right of the United States, by treaty, to assure to the citizens of a foreign nation residing in American territory equality of treatment with the citizens of other foreign nations, so that if any State chooses to extend privileges to aliens residents as well as to citizen residents, the State will be forbidden by the obligation of the treaty to discriminate against the resident citizens of the particular country with which the treaty is made, and will be forbidden to deny to them the privileges which it grants to the citizens of other foreign countries.

"The effect of such a treaty, in respect of education, is not positive and compulsory; it is negative and prohibitory. It is not a requirement that the State shall furnish education; it is a prohibition against discrimination when the State does choose to furnish education. It leaves every State free to have public schools or not, as it chooses, but it says to every State: 'If you provide a system of education which includes alien children you must not exclude these particular alien children.'

"It has been widely asserted or assumed that this treaty provision and its enforcement involved some question of State's rights. There was and is no question of State's rights involved, unless it be the question which was settled by the adoption of the Constitution.

"This will be apparent upon considering the propositions which I will now state:

"1. The people of the United States, by the Constitution of 1787, vested the whole treaty-making power in the National Government.

Distribution of Power.

"Legislative power is distributed; upon some subjects the National Legislature has authority; upon other subjects the State Legislature has authority. Judicial power is distributed; in some cases the Federal courts have jurisdiction; in other cases the State courts have jurisdiction. Executive power is distributed; in some fields the National Executive is to act; in other fields the State executive is to act. The treaty-making power is not distributed; it is all vested in the National Government; no part of it is vested in or reserved to the States.

"In international affairs there are no States; there is but one nation, acting in direct relation to and representation of every citizen in every State. Every treaty made under the authority of the United States is made by the National Government, as the direct and sole representative of every citizen of the United States residing in California equally with every citizen of the United States residing elsewhere.

"It is, of course, conceivable that, under pretense of exercising the treaty-making power, the President and Senate might attempt to make provisions regarding matters which are not proper subjects of international agreement, and which would be only a colorable—not a real—exercise of the treaty-making power; but so far as the real exercise of the power goes, there can be no question of State rights, because the Constitution itself, in the most explicit terms, has precluded the existence of any such question.

Some Implied Limitations.

"2. Although there are no express limitations upon the treaty-making power granted to the National Government, there are certain implied limitations arising from the nature of our Government and from the other provisions of the Constitution; but those implied limitations do not in the slightest degree touch the making of treaty provisions relating to the treatment of aliens within our territory.

"3. Reciprocal agreements between nations regarding the treatment which the citizens of each nation shall receive in the territory of the other nation are among the most familiar, ordinary, and unquestioned exercises of the treaty-making power. To secure the citizens of one's country against discriminatory laws and discriminatory administration in the foreign countries where they may travel, or trade, or reside, is, and always has been, one of the chief objects of treaty making, and such provisions always have been reciprocal.

"During the entire history of the United States provisions of this description have been included in our treaties of friendship, commerce, and navigation with practically all the other nations of the world. Such provisions had been from time immemorial the subject of treaty agreements among the nations of Europe before American independence; and the power to make such provisions was exercised without question by the Continental Congress in the treaties which it made prior to the adoption of our Constitution.

"The Treaty of 1778 with France, made between the Most Christian King and the thirteen United States of North America by name, contained such provisions. So did the Treaty of 1782 between Their High Mightinesses the States-General of the United Netherlands and the thirteen United States of America by name. The Treaty of 1785 with Prussia, ratified by the Continental Congress on the 17th of May, 1786, contained an exercise of the same kind of power. It is not open to doubt that when the delegates of these thirteen States conferred the power to make treaties upon the new National Government in the broadest possible terms and without any words of limitation, the subjects about which they themselves had been making the treaties then in force were included in the power.

"4. It has been settled for more than a century that the fact that a treaty provision would interfere with or annul the laws of a State as to the aliens concerning whom the provision is made is no impeachment of the treaty's authority. The very words of the Constitution, that the Judges in every State shall be bound by a treaty 'anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding,' necessarily imply an expectation that some treaties will be made in contravention of laws of the States.

"Far from the treaty-making power being limited by State laws, its scope is entirely independent of those laws; and whenever it deals with the same subject, if inconsistent with the law, it annuls the law. This is true as to any laws of the States, whether the legislative authority under which they are passed is concurrent with that of Congress, or exclusive of that of Congress."

Mr. Root cited the case of Ware vs. Hylton, in the year 1797, in which the Supreme Court considered the effect upon the Constitution of the treaty of peace with England of 1783, the case of Fairfax vs. Hunter in 1812, and the case of Chirac vs. Chirac in 1812, to show that the Constitution or laws of any State contrary to treaties made under the authority of the United States were null and void.

"A long line of cases," he continued, "have followed in the Supreme Court applying the provisions of various treaties and maintaining without exception the unvarying rule that the State statute falls before the treaty. It equally appears from these cases that the treaty provisions which were sustained by the Supreme Court and the State laws which were declared void, so far as they conflicted with a treaty, related to matters regarding which Congress had no power to legislate, but upon which, in the distribution of legislative powers under the Constitution, the States, and the States alone, had power to legislate."

"5. Since the rights, privileges, and immunities, both of person and property, to be accorded to foreigners in our country and to our citizens in foreign countries are a proper subject of treaty provision and within the limits of the treaty-making power, and since such rights, privileges, and immunities may be given by treaty in contravention of the laws of any State, it follows of necessity that the treaty-making power alone has authority to determine what those rights, privileges, and immunities shall be.

Things a State Cannot Do.

"No State can set up its laws as against the grant of any particular right, privilege, or immunity any more than against the grant of any other right, privilege, or immunity. No State can say a treaty may grant to alien residents equality of treatment as to property, but not as to education or as to the exercise of religion and as to burial but not as to education, or as to education but not as to property or religion. That would be substituting the mere will of the State for the judgment of the President and Senate in exercising a power committed to them and prohibited to the States by the Constitution.

"There was, therefore, no real question of power arising under this Japaness treaty and no question of State rights.

"There were, however, questions of policy, questions of national interests and of State interests, arising under the administration of the treaty and regarding the application of its provisions to the conditions existing on the Pacific Coast.

"In the distribution of powers under our composite system of government the people of San Francisco had three sets of interests committed to three different sets of officers—their special interest as citizens of the principal city and commercial port of the Pacific Coast represented by the City Government of San Francisco their interest in common with all the people of the State of California represented by the Governor and Legislature at Sacramento; and their interests in common with all the people of the United States represented by the National Government at Washington.

Interest Not Really in Conflict.

"Each one of these three different Governmental agencies had authority to do certain things relating to the treatment of Japanese residents in San Francisco. These three interests could not be really in conflict; for the best interests of the whole country is always the true interest of every State and city, and the protection of the interests of every locality in the country is always the true interest of the Nation.

"There was, however, a supposed or apparent clashing of interests, and, to do away with this, conference, communication, comparison of views, explanation of policy and purpose were necessary. Many thoughtless and some mischievous persons have spoken and written regarding these conferences and communications as if they were the parleying and compromise of enemies. On the contrary, they were an example of the way in which the public business ought always to be conducted; so that the different public officers respectively charged with the performance of duties affecting the same subject-matter may work together in furtherance of the same public policy and for a common purpose for the good of the whole country and every part of the country.

"Such a concert of action with such a purpose was established by the conferences and communications between the National authorities and the authorities of California and San Francisco which followed the passage of the Board of Education resolution.

"There was one great and serious question underlying the whole suoject which made all questions of construction and of scope and of effect of the treaty itself—all questions as to whether the claims of Japan were well founded or not; all questions as to whether the resolution of the School Board was valid or not—seem temporary and comparatively unimportant.

No Question of War with Japan.

"It was not a question of war with Japan. All the foolish talk about war was purely sensational and imaginative. There was never even friction between the two Governments. The question was, What state of feeling would be created between the great body of the people of the United States and the great body of the people of Japan as a result of the treatment given to the Japanese in this country?

"What was to be the effect upon that proud, sensitive, highly civilized people across the Pacific, of the discourtesy, insult, imputations of inferiority and abuse aimed at them in the columns of American newspapers and from the platforms of American public meetings? What would be the effect upon our own people of the responses that natural resentment for such treatment would elicit from the Japanese?

"The first article of the first treaty Japan ever made with a Western power provided:

"There shall be a perfect, permanent, and universal peace and a sincere and cordial amity between the United States of America on the one part and the Empire of Japan on the other part, and between their people respectively, without exception of persons or places.

"Under that treaty, which bore the signature of Matthew Calbraith Perry, we introduced Japan to the world of Western civilization. We had always been proud of her wonderful development—proud of the genius of the race that in a single generation adapted an ancient feudal system of the Far East to the most advanced standards of modern Europe and America. The friendship between the two nations had been peculiar and close.

What Was Averted.

"Was the declaration of that treaty to be set aside? At Kurihama, in Japan, stands a monument to Commodore Perry, raised by the Japanese in grateful appreciation, upon the site where he landed and opened negotiations for the treaty. Was that monument henceforth to represent dislike and resentment? Were the two peoples to face each other across the Pacific in future years with angry and resentful feelings? All this was inevitable if the process which seemed to have begun was to continue, and the Government of the United States looked with the greatest solicitude upon the possibility that the process might continue.

"It is hard for democracy to learn the responsibilities of its power; but the people now, not Governments, make friendship or dislike, sympathy or discord, peace or war, between nations. In this modern day, through the columns of the myriad press and messages flashing over countless wires, multitude calls to multitude across boundaries and oceans in courtesy or insult, in amity or in defiance. Foreign Offices and Ambassadors and Ministers no longer keep or break the peace, but the conduct of each people toward every other.

"The people who permit themselves to treat the people of other countries with discourtesy and insult are surely sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind, for a world of sullen and revengeful hatred can never be a world of peace. Against such a feeling treaties are waste paper and diplomacy the empty routine of idle form.

"The great question which overshadowed all discussion of the treaty of 1894 was the question: Are the people of the United States about to break friendship with the people of Japan? That question, I believe, has been happily answered in the negative."

The Drago Doctrine.

Much of the afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of the so-called Drago doctrine, which ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster declared was first originated by Alexander Hamilton more than a hundred years ago.

William Barnes, Sr., of Nantucket, Mass., introduced a resolution asking the society to go on record as considering it "a degradation of the functions and purposes of the navies of the world to pervert them to the duties of debt collectors, and the lowering of the dignity of Admirals of the navies to force them to perform the duties of constables, bailiffs, and sheriffs in the collection of debts."

The resolution, which also carried an indorsement of the Drago doctrine, was referred to the Executive Committee for recommendation.

Judge Advocate General Davis of the Army addressed the meeting upon the subject of immunity of neutral property from seizure. He said the abolition of the distinction of contraband of war would not bring to neutral trade the relief from war hoped for, so long as the right of blockade continued to exist along with the right of maritime search and capture. It would, however, restrict the maritime area in which searches and captures were habitually made, but without any diminution of the rigor with which they were now exercised.

William L. Penfield, Solicitor General of the United States, said that the Drago Doctrine had been made use of as a convenient substitute for the threadbare Monroe Doctrine, which had ceased to serve the purposes of those who would pervert and use it as a shield for wrongdoing.

Rear Admiral Stockton resented what he termed a "charged of piracy" made by Everett P. Wheeler of New York City, who in an address criticised the conduct of American naval officers in capturing a shipload of non-combatants in the siege of Santiago, during the Spanish-American war.

CAPT. KNIPE ACCUSED.

Police Capt. William Knipe of the Fort Hamilton Station was before Magistrate Furlong, in the Gates Avenue Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, charged with assaulting his son and daughter. Neither the son, John, 15 years old, nor the daughter, Grace, was in court, and the hearing was set down for next Thursday.

In their affidavits the son and daughter accuse their father of having attacked them in their home, 129 Jefferson Avenue, on last Monday night. John Knipe alleges that he was violently assaulted and beaten and that his father forced him across a trunk and choked him.

Grace says her father struck her in the face and then drove her from the house.

Following the alleged attack the children went to the home of a friend. The next day they went to court and swore to the complaints. They were represented yesterday by a lawyer, who explained that he had not had time to notify them to be in court. Capt. Knipe was paroled for the hearing.

A young woman who sued Capt. Knipe in the Supreme Court, in Brooklyn, for slander obtained a verdict of $2,500 last week.

GUARDSMEN REFUSE REGULAR ARMY OFFER

7th and 13th Regiments Will Not Co-operate Except as Organizations.

OLIVER WAXES SARCASTIC

Hopes Other Regiments Are Not Suffering from Similar Apparently Unfortunate Conditions.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Gen. Robert Shaw Oliver, Assistant Secretary of War, has written to Gov. Hughes asking whether it cannot be arranged for some of the National Guard regiments of New York to co-operate with the artillerymen of the regular army in the coast defense practice this coming Summer. Incidentally the letter contains a left-handed compliment to the Seventh and Thirteenth regiments of the New York Guard.

Major Gen. Roe and the colonels of the two regiments refused to participate in the practice unless the State troops could preserve their organizations, on the ground that it would be impossible to maintain the morale of the troops if the men were not directly under the charge of their own officers. This is much the same stand as was taken by the Seventh during the war with Spain.

The War Department wanted to have the men as reserves and supports at Forts Wadsworth, Hamilton, Schuley, and Totten, and invited all of the field, staff, and non-commissioned officers to take part in the instruction as individuals. But the regiments refused because they could not serve as organizations. The Department holds that fixed units are absolutely out of place in such practice.

Gen. Oliver, in writing to Gov. Hughes, expresses the hope that New York will not lose the benefit of the practice "because of the unfortunate conditions that apparently exist in the regiments in question," and that other organizations in the National Guard will be found which "will not suffer from loss of direct control of their field officers for one week."

He added that "the department is loath to believe that New York alone, with its admirable National Guard, will fail to meet the request of the department because the conditions necessarily demanded do not meet the views of the two organizations specified. It was hoped by the department that the Seventh Regiment would be the one above all others which might be willing to assist the department in carrying out the plans proposed for the defense of New York harbor."

All the other States which have had opportunity to participate in such practice have taken advantage of it.

ALBANY, April 19.—Gov. Hughes said to-night that he had received the letter from Assistant Secretary of War Oliver relative to New York regiments in connection with regular army maneuvers, but declined to give out the letter or comment on the subject at present.

COLONIAL PROBLEMS UNDER DISCUSSION

Bryce and Beveridge the Chief Speakers at American Academy Convention.

ON INSULAR BANKING

PHILADELPHIA, April 19.—The American Academy of Political and Social Science began its eleventh annual meeting here to-day. The principal speakers at the night session were Ambassador Bryce, who spoke on "Some Difficulties in Colonial Government Encountered by Great Britain and How They Have Been Met," and United States Senator Beveridge, who talked about "Development of a Colonial Policy for the United States."

Ambassador Bryce said in part:

"Both in India and the crown colonies we have left the native law, so far as it is inwoven with native custom and native religion, untouched. In India, the family rights and the inheritance rights, both of Hindoos and of Mohammedans, are still governed by their own law; and this has been greatly to the satisfaction of the inhabitants of the country. It has been our policy everywhere to protect the natives in every way, and to repress attempts of Europeans to deal unfairly with them."

In the course of his address Senator Beveridge said:

"What of the development of our colonial policy? The ruling principle along which that policy must be evolved was clear from the first. I repeat it is the principle of administration. From this principle we have departed somewhat—departed because of the supposed exigencies of party politics; because of the foolish attempt to apply a self government, which we ourselves have taken a thousand years to work out, to a people that are centuries behind us in development; because of the ignorance of some of our public men—of the impatience of others with the vast but simple duties which our colonial task presents. Both parties have been 'playing politics' with our government of dependencies. To these causes are due every departure from the natural principle of administration. And it is from these departures that all our future difficulties will flow."

Prof. J. W. Jenks of Cornell University spoke on the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippines, saying:

"The law establishing the Agricultural Bank in the Philippines authorizes the Philippine Government to guarantee a 4 per cent. income on the capital actually invested for a period of twenty-five years. The principal itself is not guaranteed. Under no circumstances can the liability exceed $400,000 a year. The bank can make loans only for the purpose of assisting agriculture, and must treat the small farmers wishing petty loans with especial favor."

Henry C. Ide, ex-Governor of the Philippines, also talked about banking, currency, and finance in the islands:

"The Philippine Government has paid its own way from the beginning. In every department—for the maintenance of schools, scientific institutions, the construction of roads and bridges, public buildings, the preservation of good order, and all other Governmental activities—from insular revenues.

Ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith presided at the evening session and made the opening address, which he concluded by conveying the greetings of the Academy to Ambassador Bryce, presenting him as the permanent honorary Chairman of the organization. Mr. Bryce received an enthusiastic greeting.

BOOTH'S VOLUNTEERS GET $250,000 HOME

Gift of Six-Story Building in 28th Street from Wealthy Contributors.

HAVE NO DEBT TO FACE

Ballington Booth, President of the Volunteers of America, announced yesterday that he had taken title, in the name of the Volunteers, to a new six-story building at 34 West Twenty-eighth Street, just off Broadway, which will be used for the executive headquarters of the organization. The property represents an investment of something like $250,000, and as a home for the Volunteers it furnishes about as great a contract to the present headquarters, in an old rookery at 88 Cooper Row, just off the Bowery, as can be imagined.

Gen. Booth was enthusiastic when he received the reporters in his office yesterday to tell them about the new acquisition of the Volunteers.

"It is a happy and triumphant climax to our ten years of work in connection with the Volunteers of America," he said. "This building seems to have been built Providentially for us. The funds with which it has been bought have been raised to the last dollar outside of our regular contributions, and not a dollar has been diverted from our work to accomplish this result.

"We did not want to place any additional burden upon the Volunteer workers, and no Volunteers have been asked to help us in raising the funds. In fact, the news will be as much a surprise to many of them as to the public at large. The help has come from those who have been interested in the headquarters and have realized its usefulness in the work of the movement."

Booth's Twentieth Anniversary.

All of a sudden Gen. Booth jumped about three feet out of his chair, as if somebody had set off a firecracker behind him. He threw his long arms high above his head and almost shouted:

"Oh, it just comes to me—it is most interesting, most interesting. Do you know, gentlemen, that it was just twenty years ago yesterday, at 10:45 in the morning, that Mrs. Ballington Booth and I sailed up New York Harbor to take up our work in America? To think that it was at the same hour twenty years later when I took title to this magnificent building for the Volunteers!"

The new building of the Volunteers is a very up-to-date affair both in design and construction. Its entire front is of copper, with granite base stones, and the window arrangement is such as to afford a maximum of light. Expense was apparently not spared in its decoration, and it has all the modern devices for fire protection. The vendor was Harry L. Toplitz, who built it.

According to the present plans of the Volunteers the street floor and basement will be rented and the sixth floor as well, which contains three suites especially designed for studio purposes. That leaves four floors for the organization. On the second floor there will be the private office of Gen. Booth and a board room to accommodate 200 people where the meetings of the executive heads of the Volunteers may be held. The third floor will be given over to the financial offices of the Volunteers and to those of the trade department. The fourth floor will be the home of the editorial department of the organization, and the fifth floor, the lightest in the building, will be the headquarters of Mrs. Ballington Booth and her Prison League, which is now cramped up in a little room in the old shack on Cooper Row.

Names of Donors Withheld.

Gen. Booth explained yesterday that the donors of the fund out of which the building was purchased did not want their names to appear in any announcement of the gift. There are between forty-five and fifty of them, all told. Then he waxed enthusiastic again.

"Why, just think of it," he cried, "one man, one of the largest givers to our building, sent along his regular contribution to the work of the Volunteers by return mail upon receipt of the regular invitation, and this only a few weeks after he had contributed so generously to our building. And we raised the money—or the greater part of it—in about six months. When we started it seemed like an impossible undertaking, and when we had raised $16,500 we stopped, thinking that we would not possibly do better than that. Then we took it up again, and now in so short a time the whole amount has come in."

Gen. Booth went over some of the figures on the work of the Volunteers for the year of 1906, how 3,933 unfortunate women were cared for in the homes of the organization, and 21,487 women giving lodgings, how the Volunteers' workers visited 27,557 families to render succor, had lodged altogether 280,812 persons, and had fed 499,754 exclusive of the holiday feasts in the large cities.

Mrs. Booth's Prison League.

There were some interesting figures upon the work of the Volunteer Prison League, which is the special charge of Mrs. Ballington Booth. The league has 50,000 members now, of whom some 43,000 are still serving their sentences. Of the 7,000 who had served their time, 2,860 have been placed in steady positions where they are doing well, and upward of 70 per cent. of the whole number of released members are leading reformed lives according to the league's reports.

The Volunteers have just incorporated St. Gregory's Hospital in Gold Street, where an average of 1,100 surgical treatments and dressings are being given free every week to the workers in that crowded district. The hospital has treated 27,960 persons since June 9 of last year.

JONES'S REMOVAL UPHELD.

George Thoms of the law firm of Quigg, Bostwick & Coleman, of 32 Liberty Street, received word from Albany yesterday that the Court of Appeals has affirmed the decree of Surrogate Thomas removing Edward K. Jones as an executor of the will of Ferdinand Hirsch, the millionaire cigar maker. This finding is the end of one branch of a protracted litigation between the Hirsch family and Jones, arising out of complaints as to the method of Jones in using the funds of the estate.

Another branch of the litigation before the Court of Appeals is an appeal from a judgment obtained against Jones for $129,000, alleged to have been illegally taken by him from the Ferdinand Hirsch Company while its President.

$15,000 Verdict in 20 Minutes.

One of the quickest verdicts ever rendered in the Supreme Court was in the case of Henrietta Gelesman against the New York City Railway Company before Justice John W. Goff and a jury yesterday. Mrs. Gelssman was thrown off a car in October, 1904. It was claimed on her behalf by Alfred and Charles Steckler that the accident happened through the negligence of the defendant. The woman was made a cripple for life. The jury, after a deliberation of only twenty minutes, brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $15,000.

INJUSTICE TO THE POOR.

President Wilson Says Law's Delay Is Responsible.

President Wilson of Princeton, in his address to the students of Columbia University, in the series he is delivering there, yesterday sounded a warning against allowing the central Government to encroach on the power of the Supreme Court. He also discussed the evils in our judiciary system. He said in part:

"There are eighteen things which are enumerated in the Constitution of the United States that the Federal Government can do. If the executive authorities can read into this Constitution in addition, anything else that they want to, what is the use of the original provisions? If you can read into them anything you please that affects commerce or other matters not contained in them, they become useless. If the Senators can't reason, it is imperative that the courts should be able to reason for them. The Supreme Court has the delicate task of saying just what the President can do and of saying how far the powers of Congress extend."

The speaker then said that there was a feeling that justice was only to be obtained by the rich man. He admitted that this feeling was well founded, but said that the reason for it was misunderstood. He said it was not because of any partiality to the rich man as such, but because we have made our legal processes so slow that the poor man cannot afford an appeal to them. On this point he continued: "It is true that the courts afford justice fully only to the rich litigants. The trouble is that the poor man needs to have his troubles settled promptly, because delay pinches. If to the delay and the cash outlay of a long litigation is added doubt as to the outcome, it is not to be wondered at that the poor man decides he cannot afford to wait and compromises—surrenders a part of his rights for immediate settlement."

FREED ON SELIGMAN CHARGE.

Vincent Murphy Then Rearrested on Old Charge of Forgery.

There were unexpected developments in Yorkville Court yesterday afternoon when Alfred Seligman, the banker, asked for the discharge of Vincent Murphy, whose arrest he had caused on Thursday for the alleged larceny of $4,000. Mr. Seligman had said Murphy had obtained the money by false representations in connection with the purchase of an automobile of foreign make supposed to be somewhere in the West. After being released on the Seligman charge Murphy was arrested on an old charge of forgery in New Haven, Conn.

Murphy had given the name of Frank Russell when he was taken to the police station, but when Mr. Seligman came into court he greeted the prisoner rather warmly as Murphy. During their conversation, it is said, Mr. Seligman told Murphy that if he would sign a paper releasing him from any civil action he would see that Murphy was discharged. Murphy's lawyer, Frederick A. Ware, brought this to the attention of Magistrate Baker, and protested against his client being allowed to sign the document. Magistrate Baker sustained the protest and discharged Murphy.

Then Detective Sergeant Ward of New Haven rearrested Murphy on the fugitive charge. Ward told the Magistrate that Murphy had cut quite a dash in New Haven in January, and had made the acquaintance of Pierpont Foster, a lawyer. Murphy, according to the detective's story, forged a check on the City Bank for $18 in Foster's name, after which he disappeared.

FORT LEE BATTLE MONUMENT.

Sculptor Carl E. Tefft's Design Accepted by the Committee.

The Fort Lee Battle Monument Committee held a final meeting at Fort Lee, N. J., last evening, and announced that Sculptor Carl E. Tefft's design had been accepted for the bronze statue to be erected to commemorate the masterly retreat of the Continental Army from New York to Fort Lee during the Revolution.

The site is at Parker's Pond, Fort Lee, and the monument, which will be unveiled in October, will be in full view from Manhattan and the river.

The New Jersey State Militia, the Grand Army of the Republic, and a score of civic bodies will take part in the unveiling, and it is expected that a detachment of United States troops will also participate. Trenton and Newark will send many school children to the dedication.

Sculptor Tefft described the monument as follows:

On a granite base will stand an upright, oblong boulder, weighing forty tons. Clinging to the boulder will be bronze figures of two Continental soldiers, each seven and one-half feet high. The design is emblematic of soldiers scaling the Palisades.

The greatest trouble I have encountered was my long search for a suitable boulder and many an excursion and incursion have I made in my hunt for one. One day I happened to ask a very young man—almost a boy—if he knew of such a one. He thought for a while, shook his head, and then said, with a confident smile, that he could quarry one for me. I laughed, but he was so persistent that I questioned him. He gave the name of Knue Viiter, quarryman, age 21, and said that he could quarry such a boulder from the cliffs of the Palisades, about a mile from Parker's Pond, at Coytesville. Well, that young man has undertaken a big contract. He'll have to make the biggest blast ever made in the Palisades. The people along the New Jersey and New York shores of the Hudson will think Hell Gate is being blown up again.

Mr. Tefft is a native of Bangor, Maine, and although a young man, has achieved several successes, among which is the fountain in Bronx Park. Eighteen sculptors competed.

Building No. 20, in which is located the steam engineering foundry, in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, was damaged by fire yesterday morning. When the blaze was discovered it had obtained a good start, and the marine fire brigade was unable to get it under control. An alarm was turned in and it did not take the firemen long to put the blaze out. The damage was about $300.

MR. AHEARN NOT PRESENT

His Lawyer Again Makes a Demand to be Allowed to Examine Witnesses, but Is Refused.

Marvin Scudder, an accountant, was the chief witness yesterday in the examination into the affairs of Borough President Ahearn's office. He declared that there were 615 street openings reported in 1906, with no restoration work ordered, as against 102 such cases in 1905, and 106 in 1904. The hearing yesterday only lasted half the day, and Mr. Ahearn was not in attendance.

Jamee W. Howard, who testified on Thursday, was examined further yesterday. He told at length of the condition of the east side streets as he had found them, and said that they were all badly in need of repair. He said the same was true of the streets on the lower west side, but that the streets west of Central Park were in fair condition. He suggested that the system of repaving in this city was poor, and that much better results might be obtained if a system of prompt reports was introduced.

Special Assistant Corporation Counsel John P. Mitchell next called Mr. Scudder, who said he had assisted Mr. Hughes as statistician in the insurance investigation. He said he had examined the street opening and paving contracts and explained the nature of them and the manner in which repairs were made.

He asserted that the records of the Bureau of Highways showed that in 1904 106 cases of street openings were reported for which there was no record of restoration work being ordered. In 1905 the number was 102, and for last year 615. He explained, however, that it was possible that the latter figure might be a little high, as there appeared to be some confusion in the records.

The hearing was concluded at 1 o'clock, Mr. Mitchell announcing that he had no other witnesses to call. At his request an adjournment was taken until Monday at 10:30. During the session Martin W. Littleton, counsel for Mr. Ahearn, was present, and as the examination of each witness was concluded he asked permission to cross-examine, which was denied by the Commissioners of Accounts, before whom the examination was held. The ruling of the Commissioners on Thursday was that the affair was ex parte, and that witnesses, as Mr. Ahearn would be, had he appeared, were not entitled to counsel.

Nothing was done during the day to compel the attendance of Mr. Ahearn. A subpoena has been served on him, directing him to appear on the 29th. It is possible that he will attend the hearing on that day.

The Automobile Club of America, through its special committee on streets, has unearthed an order issued by Fire Chief Croker on March 12 directing the drivers of all fire apparatus to proceed slowly on account of the bad condition of the streets. The order reads:

To Battalion Chiefs:

You are hereby notified that during the time the streets are in the condition they are at present, due consideration will be taken while driving to fires. If necessary, go very slowly in proceeding through the various streets which are almost impassable, as a large number of apparatus are now at the repair shops on account of broken axles, springs, etc., and a large number of men are on the sick list through being thrown from apparatus. The utmost care should be taken in responding to alarms of fire under present conditions.

As far as can be learned the order is still in force. It is probable that Fire Department officers may be called to testify at the examination now being held.

EDWARDS IN CHARGE.

Former Princeton Football Star Takes Street Commissioner's Place.

Street Cleaning Commissioner Macdonough Craven has been confined to his home for nearly a week suffering from gastritis and rheumatism. On Wednesday his condition was regarded as extremely serious. Since that time he has been recovering, and it is expected that he will resume charge of the department on Monday.

WORKMEN MADE DIRECTORS.

Knox Hat Co. Recognizes Services of Three Old and Faithful Employes.

Because they remained faithful to the company in the big strike of three and a half years ago, three employes of the Knox Hat Manufacturing Company have been elected to the Board of Directors. These men are Supt. John W. Osmun of the company's plant at Boonton, N. J.; Supt. Albert Thetford of the factory at St. Mark's and Grand Avenues, Brooklyn, and Foreman Mark A. Kerwin of the curling department of the Brooklyn factory. Kerwin and Thetford have been with the company for twelve years, and Osmun for eight years.

It is announced on behalf of the company that its principle of operation is to obtain co-operation between the workmen and the executive management, and that the advancement of the three men named is in line with this policy. The especial reason for the recognition of Osmun, Thetford, and Kerwin dates back to the strike of 1902, when the Knox firm and the United Hatters of America came to an issue and the manufacturers announced that they would never allow a member of the union to enter their employ again.

The trio remained with the company and worked with their fellows to induce them to declare for the open shop, on the ground that the union had broken its contracts with the Knox concern.

SCHOOLBOY A SUICIDE.

Shoots Himself After Being Expelled for Misconduct.

Oscar Kearn, 15 years old, who lived on the Ferry Road, Guttenberg, shot and killed himself yesterday afternoon. The boy was a member of the graduating class of the Guttenberg grammar school. He was reprimanded by his teacher yesterday, and when he was not repentant for his misdeed was sent to Principal Broughton, who expelled him.

Kearn went home and took the money he had belonging to the class, he being its Treasurer, and made up his accounts. He had threatened to shoot himself and the teacher, Miss Loeffel, so when he returned to the school after the noon recess he was watched. He seemed cooled down. He rendered an accounting to the members of the class and then left, after telling some of the boys they would never see him again.

He went out along the Bulls Ferry Road to Thirty-fourth Street, where he shot himself in the breast. He was taken to the North Hudson Hospital, where he died.

KENDALL PICTURES SOLD FOR $44,930

C. K. G. Billings Largest Buyer of a Group of Modern Dutch Canvases.

AN ISRAELS BRINGS $4,300

W. Scott Thurber of Chicago Bids In a Beautiful Marine by Jacob Maris, Once in Forbes Collection.

An unusual and beautiful lot of pictures was sold last evening at the American Art Galleries. It was the private collection of Mrs. Anna N. Kendall of Lamoille, Ill., twenty-nine canvases, which brought $44,930. The paintings were, with one exception, the work of modern Dutch masters, the nineteenth century artists, several of whom are still living. Fritz Thaulow, the Norwegian, was the one artist not belonging to the Dutch group.

All the pictures were purchased personally by the collector, Mrs. Kendall, for her own pleasure, osme of them coming direct from the artists themselves, and they were all "livable" pictures. The largest of the lot was that by Thaulow, the "Bridge at Verona" an dthis was only 25 by 32 inches. Many pictures in similar sales are distinctly art gallery pictures, beautiful, but two large for many homes and not suitable in character.

Mrs. Kendall is a great lover of nature and any one of her pictures would have been in place in the simplest home as in the richest, and they were by such artists as Mauve, Jacob Maris, Israels, and others of this well-known group.

There were photographs with several of the pictures, autographed by the artist, and one of Israels, "First Steps," a little child learning to walk, had underneath it a sentence in English by him which read: "It is long ago since I made this picture and I like it still as one of my nicest compositions."

This painting brought the highest price of the evening, $4,300. It was started at $1,000, ran immediately up to $2,000, and was knocked down to C. K. G. Billings, who made the greatest number of purchases of the sale. Mr. Billings is putting up a new house at Mt. Washington, into which these pictures will probably go.

The second highest price of the evening was given by W. Scott Thurber of Chicago for a water color by Jacob Maris, a beautiful marine, "Barges-Ville-Girerre." This picture, which brought $3,550, was formerly in the collection of J. Staats Forbes, London.

There was a large number of persons present, and the avcrage of prices was good for an unrestricted sale, yet many of the pictures, it was understood, brought less than their original purchase price.

SPRING BEATS A RETREAT.

Weather Man Says To-day Will Be Clear, but Not Much Warmer.

March, April, and May were all crowded into one brief day yesterday, and the New Yorker who got up in the morning and discovered that it was snowing so hard that one could hardly see two blocks away had the pleasure later in the day of watching the sun smile over the land before it disappeared behind the hills of Jersey. It was a day of reversals. Spring retreated, suburbanites went back to start their furnaces again, and those who had discarded Winter clothing went back for overcoats.

Gentle Spring has been erratic this month. The records of the Weather Bureau for the first eighteen days of this month show that the temperature has been 4½ degrees lower than the normal temperature for New York, the mean temperature for this month being 41 2-10 degrees, while the normal is 45 7-10. As compared with last year the contrast is more pronounced, the mean temperature for the first eighteen days in April, 1906, being 49 1-10 degrees.

The New Yorker who is longing for the return of Spring, and the small boys who would woo her beside the creek where the fish bite, the baseball rooters who are looking forward to days on the bleechers, and the lover of the seaside who is looking forward for the joy that Spring brings may all take heart. The weather to-day will be fair, according to predictions, but it will not be much warmer. Here is what the Weather Man has to say.

"The Eastern disturbance has passed of to sea south of Hatteras. The Southeastern depression has greatly increased in strength and has caused, in conjuncture with an area of high pressure to the northward, snows in Colorado and Southeast Wyoming. Cold weather continues in eastern and northern districts. The weather Saturday will be fair."

Snow began to fall about 7 o'clock yesterday morning and continued steadily for several hours, but in the streets it disappeared as soon as it fell. The record shows that .16 of an inch fell, but it melted as it touched the ground. The maximum temperature was 40 degrees at 12:05 o'clock, and the minimum 35 degrees at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

SNOWSTORM IS GENERAL.

Fruit and Truck Interests Suffer Severely from Cold.

PHILADELPHIA, April 19.—Snow fell early to-day throughout the greater part of Pennsylvania. The local Weather Bureau reports this month as the coldest April in twenty-six years.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 19.—Snow fell last night and early to-day over nearly the entire State. The temperature registered from 28 to 30 above zero.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 19.—Advices from this district report damage to the fruit and truck interests aggregating over $400,000 by the late frosts and cold weather. Peaces are reported a total loss.

DENVER, Col., April 19.—The snowstorm that has prevailed in the mountains for two days has spread over Colorado, Wyoming, a portion of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory. The Weather Bureau predicts that the storm will continue for at least twenty-four hours.

THE HORSE HAD CORNS.

G. L. Jacquin Arrested for Making the Animal Work.

Gaston L. Jacquin of 430 Fifth Avenue was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of cruelty to animals in working a horse suffering with corns. Jefferson Seligman, the banker, of 11 East Sixty-ninth Street, who is an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, wrote to Magistrate Barlow as follows:

My Dear Judge Barlow: The case of the arrest of Mr. G. L. Jacquin of 430 Fifth Avenue has been brought to my attention as an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and after giving the same careful consideration I find that the arrest was unjustified, and I hope that you will dismiss it.

Magistrate Barlow called for expert testimony, which was furnished by two veterinary surgeons, one of whom favored the action of the society and the other testified for Mr. Jacquin.

"Was this horse in condition to be at work?" asked the Magistrate of Dr. Jackson of the society.

"It was not."

"In my opinion, he was in proper condition and there was no cruelty," testified Dr. Sullivan.

Then the Magistrate dismissed the case.

No More Early Baseball Openings.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 19.—No more early April openings in the American League. President Ban Johnson has decided that no matter what the National League does next year, the opening games in the American would not take place until April 18 or 20 at the earliest. The bad weather of the early weeks has determined his mind. There will still be 154 games in the American League schedule. It will not go any later in the Fall, but open dates in the present schedule will be utilized to make up for the late start.

CUTS DOWN VERDICT AGAINST CANFIELD

Appellate Division Decides Gambler's Lawyer Is Not Entitled to $42,000.

WILL RECEIVE $17,853

Comment Made on Delahunty's Collection of Notes for Vanderbilt Gambling Debts.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court handed down a decision yesterday by which $22,500 is to be cut from the judgment for $42,000, obtained by John Delahunty, the lawyer, against Richard A. Canfield for professional services. It was announced last night that Mr. Delahunty would accept the verdict. This will, in effect, terminate the suit, as Mr. Canfield cannot appeal unless the Justices of the Appellate Division permit him to do so.

The service rendered by Mr. Delahunty to Mr. Canfield and on which the suit was based, was the collection of $130,000 on notes aggregating $300,000. The notes were said to have been made out by a wealthy young man who was afterward referred to by District Attorney Jerome as a "drunken kid," and who at the time the suit was tried was said to be Reginald Vanderbilt. He was referred to at the time of the trial as "Mr. V.," and it was made plain that he was under age.

Other services rendered, and pleaded as a second cause of action, were the care of the interests of Canfield at the time of the raid conducted on his gambling house in Forty-fourth Street by District Attorney Jerome in December, 1902, and afterward until Canfield pleaded guilty to the charge of being a common gambler. Under yesterday's decision, Mr. Delahunty will receive $17,853 in settlement for all his claims with the interest and costs.

Two opinions were written, one by Justice Laughlin, in which Presiding Justice Patterson concurs, and the other by Justice Clark and in which Justices Ingraham and Clarke concur. Justice Scott says in part:

"So far as concerns the plaintiff's first cause of action for the collection of $130,000 on notes of $300,000, the plaintiff sues on an alleged special agreement made two years before whereby, defendant promised to pay to plaintiff 25 per cent. of all claims which were defended or objected to on the ground that they were gambling debts. If such a contract was in fact made, it was in our opinion contrary to public policy and void, and the court should give no aid to its enforcement. The defendant was a common gambler pursuing his vocation in a house sustained by him for the purpose in the City of New York and also at other places. The statutes of this State have placed gambling, such as this defendant pursued, in the category of crimes and have expressly declared that all evidence of indebtedness, of which the consideration in whole or in part is money lost at play, shall be utterly void. If gambling is criminal, illegal, and immoral, and the money lost is for that reason unconfectible, it seems to me perfectly clear that an agreement to compensate a lawyer for collecting such a claim by paying him a percentage of the amount recovered must be treated as itself illegal and unenforceable."

The Justice, continuing, calls attention to the fact that the notes in question were concededly made by a minor, and could not by any process of law be collected. If, on the other hand, moneys collected had been loaned, as Mr. Canfield said, the collection did not come within the special agreement, and $10,000 would be a sufficient compensation. The Justice also declares that the amount allowed by the jury in the second cause of action, for services rendered by Mr. Delahunty after the raid on Canfield's place, appear to be very liberal, but on this question the court is not disposed to set up its judgment against that of the jury. Justice Laughlin arrived at the same result in another opinion.

Vice Chancellor Stevens, in Newark, yesterday signed an order appointing Horace C. Grice receiver for the United Syndicate Buyers' Company of Paterson. Robert B. Sedgwick, a stockholder of the concern, says that the company is insolvent.

LAST HONORS FOR POLICEMAN

A crowd of a thousand persons vainly sought admittance to the house at 304 South Third Street, Williamsburg, yesterday. On the door of the modest home was the death crepe, and, standing at the curb, was a hearse drawn by four black horses with white trappings. It was the funeral of Al. Sellick, the brave policeman, who when mortally injured by a crazed Italian's bullet on last Sunday, grappled with the man in a Thompson Street hallway and made him a prisoner in the performance of his duty.

The procession, which followed the services, was headed by a squad of mounted policemen and the police band of sixty pieces, and on its progress to the Grand Central station in Manhattan is was met by a remarkable outpouring of people. On the Manhattan side of the Williamsburg bridge, reserves from the Delancey Street Station held the crowds back. The Brooklyn mounted escort was relieved by a squad of "Bingham's Rough Riders," and at Essex Street the Brooklyn horsemen drew up as for inspection, presented their clubs as a mark of respect, and dropped out of the line of march.

In the Bowery and in Great Jones Street there were notable demonstrations. In the latter thoroughfare, outside Fire Headquarters, the famous engine 33 stood in the doorway, a driver in his place as though about to respond to an alarm. The whole company was drawn up in line in uniform. As the hearse passed, the engine house bell tolled and the firemen, in unison, doffed their caps.

Farther along the men of Fire Patrol 2, with their apparatus, paid a like tribute of respect to the police hero, as did Engine 72's crew at University Place and Twelfth Street, Sellick's old beat. All the policemen on duty at the Mercer Street Station were out with doffed caps.

There were a dozen carriages in the rear of the procession, one piled high with flowers.

I give the wearer the benefit of my thorough and practical knowledge of shoemaking, which has extended over fifty years.

I give the wearer the benefit of my exclusive method of tanning the bottom soles, which makes them more flexible and gives longer wear than any other sole leather produced in this country.

As I am the largest manufacturer of men's fine Hand-Sewed Process shoes in the world, it is necessary for me to purchase leather and other materials in enormous quantities; the benefit of the very low prices I obtain I give to the wearer in superior quality over other makes.

I give the wearer the benefit of the most complete organization of superintendents, foremen and skilled shoemakers, who receive the highest wages paid in the shoe industry, and whose workmanship cannot be excelled. The selection of the leathers and other materials for each part of the shoe, and every detail of the making is looked after and watched over by these expert men, regardless of time or expense.

If I could take you into my large factories at Brockton, Mass., and show you how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then understand why they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer and are of greater value than any other make.

W. L. Douglas, Brockton, Mass.

I have worn W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes for the past ten years, and have found them easy to walk in, stylish and very comfortable. I am constantly on my feet 16 hours daily, and have never known a pain or ache since wearing your shoes.

THE TREATY POWER ONCE MORE.

It is gratifying to learn from the able and lucid exposition of the questions arising from the exclusion of Japanese children from the schools of San Francisco, which Secretary ROOT made the subject of his opening address at the first annual meeting of the American Society of International Law in Washington yesterday, that there was at no time in our negotiations with the Government of Japan "the slightest departure from perfect good temper," and that between the authorities in Washington and the authorities of the State of California and the City of San Francisco a like relation of "entire harmony and good understanding" prevailed. To his exposition of the matter Secretary ROOT adds an argument in support of a particular and not uncontroverted view of the scope of the treaty power which, in some respects, makes us regret that the suits begun in the Federal courts in California were not pressed to a conclusion. The question of whether a treaty is the supreme law of the land, even in respect to subjects that lie wholly without the pale of Federal action, being exclusively reserved to the States, seemed to be raised in the San Francisco dispute. The Supreme Court is quoted upon both sides of the discussion; we think the country would like to know what its present and matured opinion really is.

The treaty with Japan having guaranteed to Japanese in this country equality of treatment "in whatever relates to rights of residence and travel," and under the laws of California the San Francisco School Board having excluded Japanese children from the general public schools, the question was at once raised by Japan whether the treaty, the supreme law of the land, had not been violated. The dispute having been settled in another way, Mr. ROOT was not called upon to pass upon that point, but he does most emphatically assert that had the apparent conflict been pressed to an issue, the treaty must have prevailed, even though the school regulations were a matter exclusively within the State power and outside that of the Federal Government. Supporting this view with citations from opinions of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of State says:

> Far from the treaty-making power being limited by State laws, its scope is entirely independent of those laws; and whenever it deals with the same subject, if inconsistent with the law it annuls the law. This is true as to any laws of the States, whether the legislative authority under which they are passed is concurrent with that of Congress or exclusive of that of Congress.

That is the extreme position, uncompromisingly stated. And again:

> It equally appears from these cases that the treaty provisions which were sustained by the Supreme Court and the State laws which were declared void, so far as they conflicted with a treaty, related to matters regarding which Congress had no power to legislate, but upon which, in the distribution of legislative powers under the Constitution, the States, and the States alone, had power to legislate.

Nevertheless, we suppose full faith and credit must be given to those opinions of the Supreme Court, in which it is declared that the treaty making power "extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our Government and the Governments of other nations," and we suppose some heed must be paid to the views repeatedly expressed by the court that the treaty power is limited by the Constitution in respect to what are "proper subjects" for its exercise. In Geoffroy vs. Riggs, Justice FIELD writing the opinion, the court said:

> The treaty power as expressed in the Constitution is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of one of the States.

The view taken by Mr. ROOT removes all limitations, makes the President and the Senate, as the treaty making power, the sole judges of their authority and of its scope, and leaves no imaginable subject of State legislation or policy free from their supreme control. It is hardly necessary to say that such an exercise of power would change the character of the Government and that of the States.

The regulation of school attendance being, as ex-Secretary OLNEY pointed out in his letter to Congressman MCCALL, an exercise of the police power, and the great mass of that power being reserved to the State, it will be seen that the question Mr. ROOT discusses seemed to be involved. Mr. OLNEY, however, called public attention to the fact that the treaty itself, in Article Second, expressly declared that its stipulations should not "in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade and the immigration of laborers, police, and public security, which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries." This makes it evident that the school regulations of San Francisco lie quite outside the scope and effect of the treaty—in fact, that the exclusion of Japanese schoolchildren raised no question under the treaty. We presume it was on this consideration that the suits were abandoned. It will be remembered that the controversy was settled otherwise by the passage of an amendment to the Immigration act, excluding Japanese coolie laborers, and by an amendment to the school regulations of San Francisco basing the assignment to the special schools, not upon race, but upon age and want of familiarity with the English language.

The question of the supremacy of treaties over State laws dealing with the subjects reserved exclusively for State regulation remains undecided, unless we are to accept Mr. BUTLER'S conclusions as given in his "Treaty Making Power," that "The Supreme Court has, in regard to treaties, as it has in regard to Federal statutes, ever kept in view the exclusive right of States to regulate their internal affairs, and has not allowed either treaty stipulations or Federal statutes to be so construed as to prevent the proper exercise of police powers." The opinion of the court in the Slaughter House cases is still, it seems to us, of some validity.

THE CHICAGO MUDDLE.

New York may well heed the check to "immediate" municipal ownership of public utilities in Chicago, for the conditions are similar here and there. That is to say, after the tumult and shouting, and after the popular mandate has been given, there remains the question of ways and means, and it is harder to coax dollars out of unwilling pockets than to carry elections by tricks with popular sentiment.

The vote in favor of municipal ownership was taken when the city was so near the constitutional debt limit that it could not borrow directly the money which it did not possess, and which was necessary to execute the mandate of the election. Thereupon Chicago sought to borrow the money, like a margin plunger, upon pledge not of the city's credit, but of the property which it proposed to buy. The court sees through the transparent device, and Chicago is still $75,000,000 away from immediate ownership. And we fancy that after this experience it will be harder either to borrow the money or to induce private capital to venture into a field which has been demonstrated to be the plaything of politicians and the sport of heedless voters.

New York City also is fortunate enough to have a constitutional limitation compelling revision of any hasty judgment at the polls. Moreover, the $75,000,000 which would suffice for Chicago's needs would scarcely serve for a beginning with us. Chicago's experience is a happy demonstration that something more than a vote lies between American cities and the unhappy experience of London and many other British cities.

THE BRITISH BUDGET.

Many years ago, The Saturday Review, commenting on the unfitness of Mr. GLADSTONE, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, to deal with foreign affairs, remarked that the subject matter of his speech enabled him for a space "to disport himself in the flowery glades of Budget." And it is a fact that a British statesman who can make a clear and interesting statement on national finance thereby gains or increases a reputation as a parliamentary orator. Even Americans who cannot read a Treasury report of their own country frequently find the budget speech of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, be he GOSCHEN, LOWE, HARCOURT, or GLADSTONE, if not DISRAELI or BALFOUR, not merely intelligible but interesting. Mr. ASQUITH has also, it seems, now earned this praise.

"A middle-class budget" is what the Conservative critics call Mr. ASQUITH'S. "A brutal budget" is what Mr. KEIR HARDIE calls it as a Radical and "Laborite" critic. This latter criticism is made, doubtless, mainly because the budget contains no specific provision for such humane and questionable a measure as that of old age pensions at the public expense to persons who have spent their active years in private employment. It is true that Prince VON BUELOW is continually flattering the German Extreme Left with the hope of some such measure, true that the present French Government is holding out hopes still vaguer. But one would have supposed that the British notion of self-help and self-provision for old age, which is also the American notion, would prevent the appearance of any serious scheme for old-age pensions from being incorporated in a British budget. Such schemes, it is assumed among the self-respecting and self-supporting classes of England and America, are but sops to Socialism. Mr. ASQUITH throws his sop, but it is the most shadowy of sops. He is of the opinion that the "subject of old-age pensions is the most serious and the most urgent of all the demands for social reform." A million such fine words as these would not deplete the British Treasury of a single pound sterling, nor yet hutter a solitary parsnip.

The disgust of the Conservatives is equally explicable with the disgust of the Laborites, and better based. The new income tax is to discriminate in favor of the man who earns his own living, in comparison with the "rentier," the man who is living on the accumulations of the past, whether these be his ancestors' or his own. Without doubt the proposal will bring on a debate of great bitterness. There is nothing "academic," in the British House of Commons, about a proposition to cut down the incomes of Englishmen who are living on inherited or stored wealth instead of their own earnings, or about a proposition to increase the death duties. This debate will be particularly worth watching in comparison with the French proposal to import the income tax into France. The proposal is very generally resented upon the ground that the tax is necessarily invidious and inquisitorial, and that the only safe uninvidious taxation is that upon visible sources of income, which cannot lie and cannot abscond. But, given an income tax, it will be very difficult to resist by argument the proposal of Mr. ASQUITH that it shall fall most heavily on the drones and most lightly on the working bees. On the other hand, it will surely arouse the fiercest hostility on the part of the drones.

THE PRESIDENT AND LABOR.

The Executive Committee of the Central Federated Union assumes that MOYER, HAYWOOD, and PETTIBONE are innocent, assumes that President ROOSEVELT assumes that they are guilty, and then presumes to reproach the President for referring to them as "undesirable citizens." Mr. ROOSEVELT has the Union's full permission to say what he likes about Mr. HARRIMAN, but he must speak softly and not use his big stick when he refers to laboring men. And the Union requests "Dear Sir" to retract.

We are concerned only with the position into which the Union gratuitously thrusts itself when it takes up the case of such men. We assume neither guilt nor innocence in this specific case, but leave it to be tried on its merits. We regard only the principles and practices of the organization of which the accused were officers and members when we say that no good citizen can sympathize with it or them without exposing himself to reproach. The Western Federation of Miners is, we believe, the only American labor body formally to indorse Socialism, and to support its views in the manner of Anarchists, or rather of wild beasts. The bomb which killed FRANK STEUNENBERG was only one of several which removed the Federation's enemies on separate occasions. And there is a long list of other killings which have advantaged the Federation and which have not been repudiated by it.

Now, why should workmen elsewhere intrude in this quarrel? The accused men and their organization are not fellow-workmen. They belong to antagonistic organizations whose aims and methods are different from those of the organization which assumes to censure the President. Can nothing be done so shocking in the name of labor that that word will not rally to its defense those equally incapable of doing or approving such deeds otherwise? Has citizenship a different meaning to "labor" than it has to other Americans? Will labor commit itself to the view that murder and violence which are wrong when done by others are praiseworthy when done by "entertainment committees"? There are reasonable men in the Central Federated Union. We should like to know what good they think their representatives are doing the accused, and whether they appreciate the harm they are doing their own reputable body by likening themselves to men who certainly are undesirable citizens and who would be such even if they are acquitted in this specific case.

MGR. MERRY DEL VAL.

The Washington Star prints a story "derived from authoritative sources in Rome," that "Cardinal MERRY DEL VAL, the Papal Secretary of State, will be asked to resign his post." This announcement will surprise nobody who has had occasion to pay any attention to the disclosures of the Montagnini letters as published in the Paris Figaro, and republished in every newspaper in France and in Europe. The authenticity of the selections made from them for publication in the Figaro has not, that we are aware of, been impeached.

They show very conclusively that the Vatican, after being shut out from official intercourse with France, continued to interest itself very warmly in the domestic politics of France and to endeavor to influence those politics. But that is not all. Cardinal MERRY DEL VAL took upon himself to assure his agent that the public utterances of the Pope and the private sentiments of the Vatican were two things. He expressly admonished his correspondent to pay no attention to the published statements of the Pope's attitude in comparison with the private information which he transmitted to his correspondent. In fact, he "played politics" to an extent that would have disqualified any secular politician in any civilized country from playing any further part in public life.

To say that these disclosures have excited the indignation of the Supreme Pontiff would be to say only that the Supreme Pontiff is an honest man. "Too much zeal" may be the chief fault of Mgr. MERRY DEL VAL. But too much zeal of his kind impairs the usefulness of any agent and negotiator whatever, whether in the secular or the sacred sphere, so soon as it is disclosed. The report that the too zealous Secretary of State will vacate his office, though as yet unconfirmed, is hardly more than a necessary sequence of the revelations of the Montagnini letters.

VITALITY OF THE OCTOPUS.

The death of an octopus does not always follow its legal execution, for that extraordinary creature, to borrow an illustration from an animal of a higher natural order, is sometimes given to "playing 'possum." Thus the obsequies of the Louisiana State Lottery Company were duly celebrated when MURPHY J. FOSTER was, after the most exciting campaign ever known, elected Governor of that State; an event coincident with the passage of Federal laws excluding all lottery business from the mails and providing heavy penalties against vending tickets or mailing drawing lists. But it appears that the octopus was only scotched, not killed, for the United States Grand Jury recently returned indictments against certain persons for conspiring to keep alive the old company under the name of the Honduras Lottery Company.

In the old days the head of this business would no more have denied owning an interest in the Louisiana Lottery than would PAUL CONRAD have neglected to notify the New Orleans newspapers when a man was coming into the quaint Louisiana State Lottery office, with its alligator ponds in front, to cash a ticket winning the capital prize. Enduring monuments to the lottery régime in Louisiana are the splendid Charity Hospital, the Howard Memorial Library, and the levee system at New Orleans. Equally monumental are the fortunes of the Morris and Howard families. Gen. CABELL, late C. S. A., came into the employ of the Louisiana State Lottery Company before P. G. T. BEAUREGARD and JUBAL T. EARLY, also Generals late C. S. A., severed their connection with this form of gambling and other earthly frivolities. New Orleans bankers, with or without their consent, have constantly appeared as guarantors of the Honduras Lottery Company, their names being printed on the backs of every issue of tickets, just as they were on the tickets of the ci-devant Louisiana company. It will be difficult to prove that the old Louisiana and the present Honduras Lottery Company are not one and the same thing, for all the advertising matter surreptitiously distributed since drawings have been alleged to take place in Puerto Cortez has emphasized their identity. It is unquestionably a felony to engage in the lottery business in any part of the United States, and it has been ever since the gentlemen from Louisiana expatriated their corporate existence to Honduras. Every large city has had its distributing agent, and the retail dealers were allowed to deduct 15 per cent. from their returns as profit. Business went on as usual, but under cover, for the Federal statutes, sustained by the Supreme Court, forbade the transportation of the tickets, literature, and material of lotteries.

There were occasional seizures of tickets at Mobile, Port Tampa, and at other ports in communication with Central America, and the entire set of plates from which tickets were printed was said to have been captured in Delaware by the Postal authorities, but the octopus was still alive and still playing its tentacles over every part of the country in which it had been officially pronounced dead.

The Sunday issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES is bigger and better than ever before, with its complete News Sections, its Special Cable Section, its Sports Section, its Pictorial and Magazine Sections crowded with matter of the keenest interest. Among the Magazine features which will appear to-morrow are these: A description of the new organization of the Chinese Army, with an inquiry as to what it means that the "Yellow Empire" is importing 2,000,000 rifles; an interview with Major WOODRUFF, the eminent army surgeon and historian, in which is advanced the startling theory that excess of sunlight is killing off the Aryan inhabitants of America; a reply by Prof. MUENSTERBERG of Harvard to Mr. CARNEGIE'S criticism of the German Army; a letter from STEPHEN BONSAL, THE NEW YORK TIMES'S special commissioner in St. Petersburg, who has found Russia transformed; ROBERT T. HILL, the seismologist, on the cause of earthquakes; two ex-Assistant District Attorneys of New York on the value of expert testimony; reminiscences by one of the party of the visit to America of the Comte DE PARIS and the Duc D'ORLEANS, and an account, illustrated by several pages of wonderful photographs, of the Jamestown Exposition, about to open.

Those who fight their way to the National game through our April snowstorms may take comfort in the news (which arrives authentically from Houston, Texas) that the youthful ball players are "trampling to death the thousands of beautiful carnations which grow in profusion upon the vacant lots" of that fortunate city. The citizens of Houston, on the other hand, find the spectacle saddening.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Blame Will Follow the Praise.

Secretary CORTELYOU is receiving no end of praise because of his determination to reform and simplify the relations between returning tourists and the Custom House representatives who meet them on the pier; but he must prepare himself for the comment of another kind which will surely come to him, in less quantity, but perhaps with greater force, from the beneficiaries of high protection.

For they do not want people who commit the crime of buying things abroad to have either an easy or a pleasant time when they reach their native or adoptive shore. On the contrary, they want such people to be harassed and bothered as much as possible, and that only one way of escaping annoyance be left them—the way of not buying cheaply in foreign lands wares which they could buy—or something "just as good"—for two or three times as much right here at home. And hitherto the rulers of the Custom Houses, or, rather, the rulers of those rulers, have usually been willing to help along that pretty policy by all convenient, and especially by all inconvenient, means.

We can, at least, imagine no other reason why the combined system of declarations and subsequent searches was devised, the newly offered explanation that it resulted from an unintentional superimposition of one order upon another being both tenuous and reticulated. Just how many foreign purchases it has prevented cannot be determined, of course; but that must have been one of its effects. The others have been in the line of breaking moral and statute laws by innumerable people with a general tendency toward respectability and away from mendacity and smuggling.

Come to think of it, however, we do not know that anybody has a tendency away from smuggling. At any rate, almost everybody falls into it with alarming ease, and the facility with which both men and women will violate the revenue laws would be appalling if it were not so much like a natural and irresistible instinct. Be that as it may, it is evident that Secretary CORTELYOU did not consult, before he acted, with that fraction of our population which never saw anything wrong with tariff severities except lack of severity. They will not like his reform at all unless he is able to prove very clearly that more duty is collected under a sane method of inspection than under one that drove everybody to whom it was applied into a state of rage.

Wrong in Her Nomenclature.

That young woman who has chosen the "career" of being an Adirondack guide was entirely convincing in the interview with her we printed yesterday, while she dwelt upon her right to live an outdoor life to her heart's content; but when it came to proving her ability, or that of any of her sisters, really to enter into competition with men in this industry she was considerably less successful.

Leaving aside several other questions that would at once arise in the mind of anybody who studied the problem, it is sufficient to note that the guide, when he is a man, does much more than show the way through the woods. He is a general servant who performs a large amount of work requiring strength as well as skill. He has to row boats and carry them over portages; he must build camps, cut wood, and cook, performing many of these services while his weary charges are resting from the day's toils in which he has more than shared, and he must be the master of anywhere from six to a dozen trades.

But apparently the young woman whose plans we were privileged to outline does not purpose to be a guide of this sort; in other words, her intention is to be something quite different, and, as nearly as we could see, she expects to get paid for accompanying other women in afternoon strolls through the woods around a Summer hotel. Money might be made, and even earned, by a competent person in that way, but it would hardly be guiding in the common or masculine sense, and the ambitious damsel should show her ingenuity by inventing a different name for the occupation she intends to follow.

The Committee on Physical Welfare.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A minor editorial appearing in your issue of this date in reference to eyeglasses for children in the public schools having defective eyesight refers to the Committee on Physical Welfare of School Children as a committee of the Board of Education. The writer of the editorial is misinformed. The Committee on Physical Welfare of School Children has no official connection with the Board of Education; it is composed of a number of men and women interested in improving school conditions, &c., and its headquarters are in the United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street. The Assistant Secretary of the committee is, of course, not authorized to speak for the Board of Education.

Possibly the fact that the Chairman of the Committee on Physical Welfare of School Children, Mr. C. C. Burlingham, was formerly President of the Board of Education may have produced, in some minds, the mistaken impression that said committee is appointed by and responsible to the Department of Education.

Better Than Peace Conferences.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Charles W. Eliot addressing the peace conferees made the folowing suggestions: "I believe that one of the next things to be done is to increase the amount of international publicity, to increase the knowledge of the nations about each other, and their mutual intercourse."

I venture to say, after a careful perusal of the last two issues of the Sunday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES, that the work of making known the passing events in every branch of human activity is exceedingly well done in your wonderful newspaper—wonderful because it embraces such a variety of themes and interests. Your cable service does as much to bind nationalities together as any peace conference could possibly effect, while your editorials constantly preach the grand lesson of "peace on earth," peace compatible with our National pride and honor.

Would Abolish Male Teachers.

I have read the letter signed "R. R. R." in this morning's TIMES, in which the total abolition of female teachers is advocated.

May I mildly suggest, if such extreme views—not to mention other even more assailable points in the letter in question—are attributable to a training received wholly at the hands of men, that we reverse the suggestion and plead for the total and immediate abolition of all male teachers.

It happens that my education, such as it is, was received almost wholly at the hands of women. AN ENGLISHWOMAN.

NEW YORK AND MR. BRYAN.

Mr. Scott Asks If the Newspapers Refused to Understand Him.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Within the last forty-eight hours editorials have appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES which raise a serious question as to whether it is Mr. Bryan's fault or the fault of the newspapers that he appears not to be able to get a fair hearing here in New York. For instance, THE NEW YORK TIMES in its editorial leader this morning says:

"Mr. Bryan really confesses failure upon all issues but one. He says he will drive out of the party Democrats who differ with him in respect to the initiative and referendum. In driving Democrats out of their party Mr. Bryan has been tremendously successful."

And now Democratic as well as Republican newspapers are declaring in sober seriousness that Mr. Bryan has stated that he will drive out of the party Democrats who do not believe in the initiative and referendum.

Yet it cannot be that the spirit which is behind THE NEW YORK TIMES is a spirit of unfairness, for the editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES was careful enough to send a reporter to Mr. Bryan and ask him to repeat as well as he could the exact wording of that part of his speech referring to the attitude of Democrats toward the question of whether or not the people should govern themselves. According to the reporter for THE TIMES Mr. Bryan's own version of what he said, which differs slightly from all the printed reports of it, was:

"The right of the people to govern themselves is the fundamental Democratic doctrine. We may differ about other questions, but if there is a man calling himself a Democrat who does not believe in the right of the people to govern themselves, I shall drive him out of the Democratic Party if I can, and I may add that if the Democratic Party does not believe in the right of the people to govern themselves it will have no difficulty in driving me out of the party."

If THE NEW YORK TIMES will take the trouble to interview any of the 400 members and guests of the Brooklyn Democratic Club in attendance upon the dinner on the night of April 16 it will find that nowhere did Mr. Bryan say that he would drive out of the Democratic Party any man who did not believe in the initiative and referendum. What he did say was that he would if he could drive out of the Democratic Party any man who did not believe in the right of the people to rule.

All of which suggests the interesting psychological question, "Is it Mr. Bryan's fault that the great metropolitan dailies do not understand him, or is it the fault of the newspapers themselves that they do not understand him?"

Was there ever a public man who has taken the public so completely into his confidence—who even tells what he is thinking about upon all the public questions of the day? Is that the real reason why he is so often misunderstood by the great editors of the great dailies? How happens it, then, that the millions of people who have listened to him in all of the States of the Union and in many of the countries of the world appear never to have any trouble in understanding him when they get their Bryanism first hand—from the lips of the man himself?

UNIVERSAL MILITARY SERVICE.

Approved as the Best Possible School of Americanism.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The following letter has just been sent to Prof. Muensterberg:

Dear Professor Muensterberg:

I have read your remarks on the attitude of the German people toward the Militärdienst with much interest. I have lived altogether more than seven years in Germany and have never met a man there who regretted the time he had served; the general opinion on every side was that the military service was one of the best possible schools for developing the citizens in body and in character. I do not hesitate for an instant in saying that a compulsory military service of one or two years would be the best way of training American young men to a sense of responsibility to their country, to habits of uprightness and discipline and to devotion to America and all it stands for. Without some such "school of Americanism" we cannot hope to amalgamate the hordes of Italians, Russians, Poles, &c., that have descended upon us.

Yours most truly, &c.

It is difficult for Americans to understand the conditions in Germany—a land where "graft" is unknown, where scientific achievement ranks higher than the possession of dollars, where the politicians work honestly for Fatherland and not for their own pockets, and where the fifty millions of inhabitants live in contentment and peace. The German standing army and its head—not William, the War Lord, but—William, the Steadfast, are to-day the guarantees of European peace.

E. W. SCRIPTURE.
New York, April 17, 1907.

THE ENGLISH WAY.

Passenger Fined Five Shillings for Standing In a Motor Bus.

From The London Daily Telegraph.

At Bow Street, before Mr. Fenwick, Walter Rockett, motor bus conductor, was summoned for carrying more than the proper number of passengers, and Walter Barnes of King's College, Strand, was summoned for aiding and abetting.

A constable stated that he saw Rockett's bus in Wellington Street, Strand. All the seats were occupied and two persons were standing. He signaled the conductor to stop, but the latter took no notice, and went inside the bus to collect fares. The vehicle was stopped, however, by another constable to whom the witness had signaled. The defendant Barnes was one of the two passengers he saw standing on the top of the bus; the other got away before witness could take his name and address.

Rockett pleaded that he did not see the constable signal to him to stop. As to the two passengers who were without seats, they must have mounted without his seeing them while he was collecting fares inside.

Barnes said it was rather dark at the time, and he could not be certain whether there was a vacant seat or not.

The Magistrate pointed out that it was the conductor's duty to see that his bus was not overcrowded. He would be fined 10s. and 2s. costs. Barnes was not so much to blame, but he must pay a fine of 5s. and 2s. costs.

Crowded Cars Again.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As the press is such a power for effecting things, could you aid a long-suffering locality to a decent trolley service? On Vernon Avenue, Long Island City, the cars at the home hour pass so crowded that there is no room for another unless he "hangs on" somewhere.

Think of American citizens crowded to suffocation in a car, or not having a chance of a rainy day even of hanging on under the dripping from the roof, while the exploiters take good money for such lack of service. Certainly there is no excuse for not running cars at the busy hours with frequency enough to give the tired mechanics not only standing room, but seats. Because the patrons are mostly workingmen may be the reason they are so imposed upon. PRO BONO REIPUBLICAE.

LATIN THE LANGUAGE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your recent editorial on a "'Restored' Latin" is somewhat suggestive. It has always seemed to the writer that if one-half of the energy and ingenuity displayed in the creation of Volapük, Esperanto, and kindred enterprises had been devoted to simplifying and regularizing Latin the dream of a universal language would have been nearer a fulfillment.

The scholars of the Renaissance were such extreme purists that they made a fetich of Latin and overlooked its possible utility for everyday use. The advantages of Latin are many; its adoption would excite no National prejudices, it is extensively studied even to-day, its vocabulary is copious and has yielded tribute to nearly every cultivated tongue. In fact, we have in Latin a ready-made language whose possibilities seem to have been overlooked by those striving for a world speech. Classical scholars sneered at monkish and law Latin, but the monks and lawyers were making of Latin a working tool for thought and business; but because they coined words and did not always comply with grammatical rules and idioms of the Augustan age they were held up to scorn and criticism, and any departure from the standards of antiquity was regarded as sacrilege.

The growth of the language question in many countries, where it is considered as a badge of patriotism, would seem to postpone, at least, if not forbid, the adoption of any modern language as a master tongue, and until this spirit subsides no nation can hope to see its speech spread much beyond its borders.

The great difficulty with any speech, made, as you say, "ad hoc," is that the mother tongue of the builder plays, unconsciously perhaps, such a part in its construction; a glance at Esperanto reveals this. The utility and desirability of a world language are such that they prove themselves, but the question naturally arises, What shall it be? Each nation thinks its tongue is, or ought to be, the speech of Paradise, and to admit that there might be a better and simpler language would savor of treason.

It seems to the writer that Latin simplified and regularized would be more readily accepted by the world than any purely artificial language, however ideal and scientific in its construction. X.

GOOD WORDS FOR SICILY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am not only a reader, but a real admirer of your paper, and my admiration for it increases when I see that it deals with the question of Italians carrying concealed weapons in a fairer way than an Italian himself, Coroner Acritelli, does with his letter signed by 200 Italian women. I am proud to be a Sicilian, and to show that I am a law-abiding citizen, I have only to show that I was the first to cause the arrest and conviction to five years in Sing Sing of a Black Hand man, exactly as you wrote in one of your Sunday issues. But to read such foolish and cowardly insults, thrown at a beautiful and glorious island by an Italian, and, moreover, a Calabrese, makes the blood hot.

Has it been shown by a regular and official canvass that all or even the greater part of the Italians arrested in the last raids are Sicilians? And suppose they were, would it prove that the Sicilian is a bloodthirsty man, treacherous, &c.? You answer very well to this, when in your editorial you say: "It does not follow that because an Italian or a Sicilian is found in possession of a concealed weapon he is a professional criminal, a robber, or a blackmailer," &c.

Sicily has always been a great and glorious country, and a great factor in the welfare of Italy; all those qualities attributed to Sicilians must instead be attributed (and so are, in Italy and out of Italy,) to that disgrace of Italy, the Calabrian Provinces, whose history has nothing to compare with the glorious past and present of Sicily. ALL FOR PEACE.

Complaint That the Conference Was Meagrely Reported.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Being a daily reader of your paper, I beg to claim your attention and a short space in your columns to register a deep feeling of indignation, due to the keen disappointment experienced in reading your meagre report of the Peace Conference sessions held on Tuesday at Carnegie Hall. In every way you have given to the public, unable to attend, a wrong impression of those gatherings. You have not only omitted to publish enlightening and uplifting addresses of many scholarly minds, but you have apparently taken pains to pick out as "fit to print" the few unpleasant or trifling incidents. And yet for months the public has had thrust upon it the Thaw trial, in all its loathsome detail. With this glaring contrast of "news" ennobling and "news" revolting, opportunity for good neglected on the one hand and chance for sensational harm accepted on the other, I ponder upon your motto, "All the News That's Fit to Print."

Would it not have been more in keeping with your policy to have given as much of your valuable space to the addresses delivered at the Peace Conference for three days as you have given to that notoriously miserable trial for three months?

Desiring to review the thought gems from such sources as Prof. Felix Adler, Miss Jane Addams, and others, I naturally regret that my daily paper has failed to print "news" worth while. Can you not make good by giving the best discourses of the Conference in your next Sunday magazine edition?

MRS. A. DENNIS.

The Drago Doctrine.

From the London Chronicle.

What is the "Drago doctrine," which is to be excluded from the deliberations of The Hague conference? It has nothing to do with the late Queen Draga of Servia, but derives its name from Dr. Drago, Foreign Minister of the Argentine Republic, who, imitating the example of President Monroe, enunciated the convenient theory that debts owed to the citizens of one Government by those of another may not be "collected" by force.

This was when the combined fleets of England, Germany, and Italy, in 1902, appeared off Venezuela, and caused Mr. Kipling to write his "Rowers." This "Drago doctrine" was naturally hailed with enthusiasm by all money-borrowing republics of South America; but they were told from Washington that it could not be regarded as a sub-clause of the Monroe doctrine.

REMINISCENT.

I'm longing now with all my heart
I was a boy again;
I wished a hundred dollars looked
The size that it did then.

I'm wishing that I was a youth,
My fortune still to seek,
And earning by my honest toil
Ten twenty-five per week.

I'd like to wear a tattered coat
With such a joyous pride,
I fain would go my barefoot way
With such a lordly stride.

Don't think I am a millionaire,
And kicking up this row;
I'm yearning for those days, h'gee,
Because I'm poorer now.

IBSEN DRAMA CHOSEN FOR MME. NAZIMOVA

Russian Actress Will Appear Next Season as Rita in "Little Eyolf."

AMERICAN PLAY ALSO

Plans for Alla Nazimova's productions next season under tha management of Henry Miller were made public yesterday. Mme. Nazimova's next new venture will be a presentation of Henrik Ibsen's famous and singular play, "Little Eyolf." The production will not be made in the Autumn, but will take place either in the middle of the season or in the early Spring.

Mme. Nazimova, according to present arrangements, will open next season at the Bijou Theatra, where she is now appearing in "Comtesse Coquette," and will continue for a few weeke in the present comedy and matinée performances of "A Doll's House." She will then go on tour, and will later come back to ths city with her new production.

"Little Eyolf" has never been presented here by a professional company. Some years ago it was produced by the studente of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Curiously enough, this is the piece in which Mme. Oda, the noted Danish actress who has recently arrived on leave of absence from the Royal Theatre of Copenhagen, expects to open in New York some time in May. Mme. Oda, it has been announced, will play in Danish with an English-speaking company.

"Little Eyolf" is one of Ibsen's later works, and is pervaded with the spirit of mystic symbolism so noticeable in his compositions. The leeding character is that of a woman, Rita, who has become jealous of the love her husband bears their little lame child. As if to punish her, the child is drowned. Thereafter husband and wife begin a new life, striving to forget their sorrow in devoting their attention to the sufferings of others. The part of Rita, though played by several actresses abroad, has been one at which American players have hesitated, fearing that it could not be made sympathetic.

When she returns to the Bijou from her tour on the road next season Mme. Nazimova expects to make a second production in addition to "Little Eyolf." This second play, which has been purchased by Henry Miller for the use of his Russian star, is a modern drama of American life by Ridgely Torrence, entitled "The Mad Stone." A "mad stone," according to the old belief, is a stone which if put over the bite of a mad dog will serve to draw out the poison. Mr. Torrence, who is now sailing on the Mediterranean with William Vaughn Moody, author of "The Great Divide," has been employed by the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and is a well-known poet.

With regard to the report that she would soon be seen in a productinn of Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra," Mme. Nazimova last night said that though it was her ambition to appear in this play, she had no intention of attempting it for several years to come. She appreciates that she must become more familiar with the English language and English traditions before essaying such a classic rôle. "I may appear as Cleopatra about four years from now," said Mme. Nazimova.

WON'T REMODEL DALY'S.

Shuberts Will Get the Old Theatre Practically as It Is.

When Daly's Theatre passes into the hands of the Shuberts on May 1, it will not be dismantled, as has been expected. Instead of removing all the interior decorations, the chairs, and even the tiling and paneling, the Daly estate will remove only a few historic paintings in the lobby, and the theatre will then be ready for the occupancy of Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin.

Lee Shubert explained last night the change in the plans of the present management.

"This morning I received a letter from the agent of Mr. Jones, owner of the theatre building," said Mr. Shubert. "This letter said that Mr. Jones had purchased from those at present in control of the theatre all of the fittings which Daly put into the building, and which, by the terms of the lease, his estate had the right to remove. The only exceptions were the pictures in the lobby."

Mr. Shubert reiterated that he expected to continue the famous playhouse under its old name.

"We do not see how we can be prevented from using the name 'Daly's Theatre,'" he said. "We do not expect that any serious attempt will be made to prevent us from doing so."

RAPS COLLEGE MEN.

Garfield Tells Alpha Delta Phi Members Modern Students Are Too Cynical.

Nearly seven hundred members of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity attended a dinner held last night in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor, as part of the seventy-fifth annual convention of the fraternity, which has been going on for the greater part of the week. The dinner was remarkable for ths large attendance, for the extreme high spirits displayed by a number of the brothers, and for the severe criticism of the young college men of to-day indulged in by Hamilton Wright Mabie and James R. Garfield, Secretary of the Interior.

The guests occupied tables beneath Japanese umbrellas hung with Japanese lanterns and triangular lamps bearing the names of the various colleges which have "Alpha Delt" societies. There were twenty-three colleges represented at ths dinner, two of them Canadian.

In the entire evening, until the speaking began, and intermittently thereafter, the room resounded with the college yells of a dozen institutions of learning, sometimes rendered ona at a time, often two or three simultaneously. At ona end of the wing of the ballroom, where the Harvard delegates to the convention sat, the noise was almost continuous from start to finish.

Joseph H. Choate Cheered.

Joseph H. Choate, who spoke at tha twenty-fifth and the fiftieth annual convention dinner, was to have been present and to have spoken last night, but a summons to Washington to talk over the programme for The Hague Peace Conference interfered. At tha announcement of his enforced absence, made by Talcott Williams, the toastmaster, three rousing cheers were given for him. Mr. Williams then told a story of a parson on his way to witness a football game, who, when asked where he was going, recalled the Harvard slogan, stoppad himself in time and replied:

"To yell with Hale."

In this way Mr. Williams introduced Edward Everett Hale, a member of the fraternity since five years after its foundation.

Mr. Hale told the diners that such associations as theirs were formed to break up separation, and that by such associations the forty-four States had become welded into one Nation. To train the leaders, he said, was the principal thing, and that duty should be theirs. "If you hang together," he said, "you will not hang separately. I, me, and mine. My stocks, and my securities, and my interests. If that is the spirit of the educated man of to-day in this country, it were better he had never been born."

Continuing, he said he would like to know what man in the country the men under twenty-one admired the most. At this there were cries of "Hale! Hale! Hale!" The veteran shook his head, however, and declared that it was the man who held the reins of power at Washington, an Alpha Delt, himself. Then he said that together, was the great ward of the future, and the delegates must go back to their own towns to "make people of one heart and of one soul in the service of one God."

Mr. Mabie began his speech by saying that he had recently heard that "you can always tell a Harvard man—but you can't tell him much." He hoped those at the end of the room would appreciate that. Then he went on to say that if the fraternity would continue to be successful, it must be planted in all the smaller colleges, and this work depended on the younger men in it.

"What I want to know is how the college man of to-day regards the Alpha Delta Phi? Does he regard it as simply a social club, to which he is elected by an arbitrary rule? Or do you think of the men in it as the founders thought of them; as men on whose foreheads there was branded the invisible star that marked them as the men that were to be? Are you thinking of yourselves as the descendants of ancestors who were great in their time? And are you seeing to it that those who enter it now are gentlemen in all that that word meant in its old accepted sense? Four things go to make a gentleman—a sense of honor, a sense of loyalty, a sense of obligation, and a sense of courtesy."

Mr. Mabie was loudly cheered when he set down. It was learned afterward that he had heard of a man not a member of the society, who, however, was entitled to attend the dinner, being forcibly ejected from the room, and that incident probably led him to shape his speech as he did.

Mr. Garfield's Speech.

Mr. Garfield was the next speaker, and he brought the following message from President Roosevelt:

"Tell them I hope the Alpha Delta Phi will continue to be in the future, as she has in the past, the leader of fraternities, to teach men that there is something better and higher than what we learn in books."

Secretary Garfield said he wanted to talk of the obligations that rested on the educated men of to-day, which too few of them understood.

"It is unfortunate," he said, "that the college life of to-day is not the life that opens to the young man those ideas of what he must stand for when he goes out into the world. It is unfortunate that the college man of to-day becomes imbued with cynicism and believes that the day of opportunity is passed. Never in the history of the world was opportunity so golden; never was there greater need of honest, God-fearing men then to-day. If the educated man fails to realize this, and fails to meet his obligations then this country will gradually slip down hill and it will be said that the democratic form of government has proved a failure."

In addition to the speakers mentioned, there were at the guest table Francis L. Stetson, W. B. Leonard, B. W. Franklin, James H. Hoyt and Prof. Frederick J. Woodbridge of Columbia.

MOSQUITO HUNTERS DINE.

Dr. Felt Urges State Appropriation to Aid in the Work.

The mosquito hunters, who call themselves the American Mosquito Extermination Society, held their fourth annual campfire at the Union League Club last night and listened to stories of the chase.

Dr. L. O. Howard of Washington, the Government's chief entomologist, who, as tha pioneer mosquito hunter in this country, is always the leader at such gatherings, told of the hunt in foreign lands. He sails to-day on a tour of investigation for the Department of Agriculture.

Dr. E. Porter Felt, the New York State Entomologist, was another of the speakers, and referred to the need of a State appropriation for researches into the habits of the mosquito, which he said are not yet sufficiently known, especially the salt water species, so make it easy to take local action with sufficient certainty of success. He proposed to make a thorough study of these pests with special reference to the time and extent of their migrations and other variation in habits.

ANIMAL DINNER A SURPRISE.

Novel Birthday Feast Given to Lehman Strauss.

A masquerade dinner, with the guests appearing in costumee representing various animals, was a feature of last evening's social doings. It was a birthday surprise dinner given to Lehman Strauss, tha horseman, and his friends at his home, 604 West 115th Street. The guests were asked to gather in tha afternoon. They were all at table when Mr. Strauss arrived, and their animal costumes completely hid their identity.

The decorations were all typical of animal life, the horse predominating. About the room were whips, spurs, saddles, and other trappings of tha horse. About the table, arranged tastefully amid floral designs, were large and small animals of various types.

LAUD CAMPANINI AT THE MANHATTAN

LOADED WITH PRESENTS

Cleofonte Campanini waved his official farewell last evening at the Manhattan Opera House, and it was a gala occasion. The house was packed, for all tha principal artists in the company sang, sava Calvé and Trentoni.

Tha bill was a varied one and included acts from several of the popular operas of the répertoire, and ona or two novelties, but the main interest centred in the conductor, who has had so much to do with the success of the season.

In the second intermission he was called before the footlights many times and showered with presents, among them a full silver dinner set from the artists. Finally Mr. Campanini dragged Mr. Hammerstein before the curtain with him, and when quiet was restored the impresario made a little speech.

"I am glad that you appreciate my conductor," he said. "I consider him one responsible in a large measure for the success of the season."

Then Mr. Hammerstein retired, leaving the conductor to stand and bow. All the men of the orchestra were applauding, and the artists and chorus behind the scenes.

Next to Mr. Campanini's ovation, the feature of the evening was the chorus singing in the prologue to Boito's "Mephistopheles." It was perfectly done and reflected great credit on the singers.

Mme. Bressler-Gianoli appeared in a duet from "La Favorita" with Jean Altchevsky. It is the first time that she has sung on this stage since Emma Calvé has been here, and she was warmly welcomed. Mme. Arta sang an air from "Der Freischütz" with much charm. She is evidently well adapted for German rôles.

The first act of "Trovatore" was sung, with the usual cast; Mr. and Mme. Gilibert appeared in a duet from "Les Dragons de Villars," Mme. Zeppilli and Mr. Gianoli-Galletti sang a duet from "Don Pasquale," and the fourth act of "Rigoletto" was sung, with Mme. de Cisneros for the first time this season in the rôle of Maddalena.

The programme ended with a performance of the first act of "Pagliacci," in which Mme. Donalda said her good-bye to the Manhattan. She acted and sang with great spirit. Mr. Sévelhac returned to the part of Silvio, Mr. Sammarco to the part of Tonio, and Mr. Bassi sang Canio.

BARON DE HIRSCH SERVICES.

Youthful Aliens Observe Anniversary of Their Benefactor's Death.

Five hundred little Jewish boys and girls, most of them new arrivals in America, all of them protégés of the Baron and Baroness de Hirsch Educational Fund, crowded into the auditorium of the Education Alliance, in East Broadway, yesterday, at the "Yahrzeit" services held to commemorate the death of Baron de Hirsch, the anniversary of which falls to-day. The anniversary of the death of Baroness de Hirsch was celebrated in March.

The little ones marched into the hall wearing miniature American flags. Some of them have been only three months out of Russia, and they sang patriotic songs with a touch of Yiddish accent. The children have similar exercises each Friday morning at the Alliance. It is part of the training afforded the little foreigners in molding them from Russians, Roumanians, and Gallicians into American citizens.

The provisions of the de Hirsch gift provided that children from these three lands should be secularly educated and trained in manual arts and in agriculture. Dr. David Blaustein, the head of the school, explained yesterday that it aims to prepare the immigrant children for the public school. Half a dozen boys and girls, none of whom had been in America more than a few weeks, recited quotations. One black-haired little girl, who left Ellis Island hardly three months ago, recited a Psalm, and did it so well that she had to repeat it.

Dr. Blaustein made an address in Yiddish, explaining to the youngsters in simple terms the munificent purpose which led the two Jewish philanthropists to establish the educational work and telling of their lives.

SONS OF REVOLUTION DINE.

The Sons of the Revolution celebrated the 132d anniversary of the battle of Lexington with a dinner at Delmonico's last night. A paper on "The Regimental Colors in the War of the Revolution," illustrated by stereopticon views, all prepared by the author, was read by ex-Assistant District Attorney General Gherardi Davis. The scenes, over forty in number, represented the work of fifteen years on the part of the author, who is an artist as well as a traveler and expert photographer.

The views represented the flags of tha Americans, their French allies, and the English and Hessian regiments who fought during the Revolution.

Col. Asa Bird Gardiner and Edmund Wetmore, President of the Sons of the Revolution in New York State, also spoke.

"Giants" Win Morning Game Through Dorner's Wild Pitching.

BOSTON, April 19.—The New York Giants defeated Boston in the morning game here to-day by a score of 4 to 1. Two games were to have been played, but owing to a snow and rain fall in the afternoon the second was postponed.

New York's morning victory was won in unusual fashion. Dorner held the visitors down to two hits, but gave five bases on balls in the opening inning and hit a runner, forcing in three runs. They scored one more later, and, as it proved, these were enough to win.

Shannon and Browne got bases on balls in the first inning, Devlin sacrificed, Dorner hit Seymour, filling the bases, and then passed Bowerman, forcing Shannon across the plate. McGann rapped to Brain, who threw to the plate, forcing Browne. Dahlen walked, forcing in Seymour. Corcoran beat out a slow one to Brain, and Bowerman scored. Ames fanned, ending the inning. In the fifth Devlin scored on a pass, a sacrifice, and Dahlen's single.

Boston's only run came in the seventh, when Corcoran fumbled Howard's easy grounder. Bridewell forced Howard, Devlin to Corcoran. Ritchey singled to left, but was out trying to stretch the hit. Shannon to Devlin, to Corcoran. Brain singled to right, scoring Bridewell. Brown hit in front of the plate, and Bowerman threw him out at first.

Dorner was effective after the first inning, when it was too late. Ames held Boston just where he wanted them all through. Despite the cold weather 8,000 persons saw the game. The score:

BELMONT COLT WON ARVERNE STAKES

FRESH FIRST AT LONG ODDS

The rather ordinary racing programme offered at the Aqueduct track yesterday produced one really remarkable effect when, in spite of the snowstorm and dismal weather it attracted an attendance of about 7,000 visitors to the bleak Queens County course.

It was a notable day for horsemen who figure as race track owners or officials of The Jockey Club, for these made a clean sweep of the programme, August Belmont, Chairman of The Jockey Club, winning the stake feature of the card with his home-bred three-year-old Okenite. H. M. Knapp, Steward of The Jockey Club and member of the State Racing Commission, won another race with Fresh, carrying the colors of the Oneck Stable, while Timothy D. Sullivan of the Metropolitan Jockey Club sent out a winner in Dr. Gardner. Samuel Ross of the Washington Jockey Club and chief owner of the Columbia Stable won with the fast filly Lady Isabel, and J. A. Bennett of the Brooklyn Jockey Club won two races with Ed Ball and Molesey.

Okenite's race in the Arverne Stakes, at three-quarters of a mile, was the most ambitious performance of the afternoon, and the style of the Hasting gelding's victory caused horsemen generally to move up the Belmont three-year-old a notch or two in their estimation. Eight of ten horses named to run for the stakes went to the post with Okenite carrying equal top weight with the Oneck Stable's Clare Russell, and starting favorite at odds on over Malacca, winner of two good races at Washington, and Colonel Jack and Ampedo, horses that showed high-class form at the California Winter tracks. The race was the fourth on the card, the track by that time having become sodden on the surface, but the softening of the going suited Okenite perfectly. Ridden by Mountain, he broke back in the crowd, Colonel Jack and Dan Buhre leading away, while Malacca and Clare Russell bumped togcther just as they broke and both dropped back out of the contest. George S. Davis ran through the crowd in the opening strides and carried the field at a fast pace well into the stretch, Okenite closing in on him from the moment that the horses were turned into the straight and showing in front more than a furlong from the end. From that point to the winning post Okenite had it all his own way and galloped in an easy victor in fast time for the track, halt a dozen lengths away from Dan Duhre, a 20 to 1 outsider, which lasted just long enough to get second place a head before Colonel Jack, which closed a lot of ground after stumbling immediately after the start.

The betting sensation of the day was furnished in the third race, when the Oneck Stable's Fresh, starting at 60 to 1, got up in the last strides and snatched the purse for selling class two-year-olds from the heavily backed Youthful. The latter was sent out as a good thing of the first water, and was backed from 20 to 1 down to 7 to 2 at post time. Summary:

STEVENS'S LACROSSE VICTORY

The Harvard lacrosse team was defeated at Hoboken yesterday by Stevens Institute by the score of 9 to 1. The game was played in very cold weather, which, although unfavorable for fast playing, did not aeriously interfere with the players. Stevens made seven goals in the first half, and outplayed Harvard at all points of the game. Furber shot the only goal for Harvard, and it was a lucky shot which Sturken should have stopped.

Starzenski made the first goal for Stevens in 30 seconds, only three passes being necessary to accomplish the play. The goals then came thick and fast, Starzenski, Roberts and Wiley sharing the honors.

Both teams played the second half with one man short. Wendell, the Harvard Captain, was forced to retire because of injuries, and the visiting team had no substitutes available. The game in this half was much more even than in the first, and although Harvard got through the Stevens defense, it could not shoot past Sturken, who made several sensational stops. The line up:

Harvard, 1.	Position.	Stevens, 9.
Shelp	Goal	Sturken
Marsters	Point	Van Beuren
Arnold	Cover point	Demarest
Cochrane	First defense	Youmans
Comey	Second defense	Helms
Cobb	Third defense	Murray
Barber	Centre	McBurney
Currie	Third attack	Armstrong
Francis	Second attack	Roberts
Vanco	First attack	Starzenski
Furber	Outside home	Wiley
Wendell	Inside home	Drinkwater
		Cunningham

Goals—Starzenski, (2.) Wiley, (4.) Roberts, (2.) Drinkwater, Furber. Referee—Dr. Maddern, Crescent A. C. Goal umpires—Mr. Shaw, Harvard, and Mr. Norris, Stevens. Timekeepers—Mr. Elder, Harvard, and Mr. Mervine, Stevens. Time of halves—Twenty-five and twenty minutes.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 19.—Thomas Longboat, the Canadian long-distance Indian runner, to-day won the Marathon road race over the twenty-five-mile course, finishing at the Boston Athletic Association house after a magnificent run, in spite of unfavorable conditions, and broke the existing record for the event by over five minutes. MANY MOTOR RUNS BY LOCAL AUTOISTS

Long Islanders Will Open Touring Season To-morrow with Oyster Bay Outing.

WANT HILL CLIMB EVENT

If Not Arranged In New York Territory, Many Competitors Will Enter Philadelphia Contest.

It has remained for the Long Island Automobile Club to give the first evidence of real activity in the metropolitan district by announcing the first of its series of club runs of the year, which will begin to-morrow, going to Oyster Bay. The start will be made from the clubhouse, 360 Cumberland Street, Brooklyn, and the route chosen will go through Flushing, Little Neck, Lakeville, and Roslyn. It is to be a pleasure run pure and simple says the committee and no stipulations will be exacted concerning the number of passengers to be carried or the exact time of departure or arrival at Oyster Bay. A number of similar runs to adjacent towns in Long Island are being planned by the committee. They will probably come at intervals of every two weeks if the members, as is expected, show sufficient interest to go in a body to one place for a social automobile outing.

"Is any competition of interest going to be held in the New York locality on Decoration Day?" has been the question asked by a score or more of motorists during the past week. Several plans have been proposed as a means of stirring up motor activity and affording spectators who are interested in motor contests an opportunity to see what some of the latest types of runabouts and touring cars can do. Several agents have stated that they were ready to enter hill climbing contests or track races for stock cars whenever such events are arranged. The hill climbing competition has found considerable favor, but in case it should fail to meet with success, a number of New York motorists intend to go to Philadelphia on May 30 and take part in the hill climbing event of the Quaker City Motor Club.

Considerable trouble has been experienced by the Philadelphians in securing a hill where they could hold their races unmolested on Decoration Day. The first selection in Fairmount Park had to be abandoned, but Monk's Hill, near the Gladwyn Station, on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, has now been chosen. The hill is about a mile long, with an average grade of 20 per cent. and one very sharp turn. The road surface is only fair, and it will probably present the severest test of auto hill climbing abilities that has ever been tried in an event of that character near New York. Several classes for different types of cars will be provided, and the victors will surely win all the honors that may be coming to them.

Owing to legislative difficulties, the Worcester Automoobile Club has abandoned its proposed hill climb on May 30 up the famous Dead Horse Hill, just outside of Worcester, Mass. In past years this has been one of the most notable events of the kind ever held.

New York motorists will have an opportunity of entertaining their Albany friends on June 20, when a big delegation of members from the Albany Automobile Club will arrive in the city on their annual tour. After spending the night in New York the up-State travelers will go to Atlantic City, stopping a day at Asbury Park.

Y. M. C. A. SWIMMING RACES.

West Side Branch Athletes Show Skill In the Tank.

The third of the series of swimming races to be held by the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, West Fifty-seventh Street, provided exciting sport last night. There was a great splashing among the novices in their short dash, which was won by William Friedlander. The use of strokes was as various as the men, although many of them displayed some degree of skill in following the crawl stroke made famous by C. M. Daniels.

In the fifty-yard handicap race Sidney Grant, with 7 seconds, and William Friedlander, scratch, made a fine spurt at the finish. Grant was especially clever at the turns at the ends of the tank, and it was on this that he managed to defeat Friedlander by inches. The relay race also brought about a close finish for Dr. Louis Weizmiller, who acted as referee, to decide. The summary:

Fifty-Yard Swim, Handicap.—First heat won by William Friedlander, (scratch;) George Hippard, (12 seconds,) second. Time—0:37 1-5. Second heat won by Sidney Grant, (7 seconds;) Henry Eylers, (scratch,) second. Time—0:35 4-5. Final heat won by Sidney Grant, (7 seconds;) William Friedlander, (scratch,) second; Henry Eylers, (scratch,) third. Time—0:34 4-5.

Twenty-Yard Swim, Scratch.—Heats won by A. Marra. Time—0:16. William Friedlander, Time—0:13. Henry Eylers. Time—0:13 3-5. Final heat won by William Friedlander; Henry Eylers, second. Time—0:12 1-5.

Thirty-Yard Swim, Novice.—Won by Sidney Grant; Francisco Hollweg, second; George Hippard, third. Time—0:23 4-5.

Eighty-Yard Relay Race.—Won by team, George Hippard, James W. Owens, Sidney Grant, and Henry Eylers; team, A. Marra, William Friedlander, Francisco Hollweg, and Charles Davidson, second. Time—1:09.

Medals for Y. M. C. A. Gymnasts.

Young athletes of the Boys' Branch of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association last night held their annual gymnasium exhibition. A squad of 100 boys performed on the apparatus. Instructor Charles Batchellor and President Frank Fall presented medals to the winners in the season's work. Wilfred Ackerly received the gold medal for scoring the highest number of points, a total of 355 out of 400; Robert McCann got the silver medal with 340 points, and Keeler Mann, Charles Ehein, and Edwin Folz received special mention. William Church, Philip Miller, Joseph Polanka, William Weber, and Joseph Dawes were awarded to leaders' places. Thomas Just, Garland Reis, and Charles Risdon received emblems.

Yale's 'Varsity Crew Shows Form.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 19.—In the most satisfactory attempt to cover the four-mile course this Spring the Yale 'Varsity eight today defeated the two substitute crews by six lengths. Owing to high winds and adverse tide the three eights stopped at the end of three miles.

The substitute oarsmen were badly pumped out, but the regulars finished strong. The reserve strength and finish in blade work shown were the best displayed since the oarsmen launched their shell this Spring. The 'Varsity rowed as follows:

Stroke, Boulton, No. 7. Ide; 6, Howe; 5, Taft; 4, Hopkins; 3, Rice, 2, Griswold; bow, Auchincloss.

Amateurs Play Good Billiards.

Two games were played last night in the Harlem amateur open handicap 14.2 billiard tournament at Morningstar's billiard academy, Lenox Avenue and 125th Street. In Class A, A. Barnes and R. Irving were the opponents, each to play 125 points. Barnes won the game, scoring 125 to 98 for Irving, the winner's high run being 25, with an average of 4, while Irving's best run was 20, and his average 3 23-25. In the Class C match E. Parker beat W. Colman by a score of 85 to 83, the winner making a high run of 14, with an average of 3 10-25, while Colman averaged 3 8-25, his high run being 16.

MISS SUTTON AT THE NETS.

California Girl Practices on St. Nicholas Rink Courts.

Miss May Sutton, the lawn tennis expert, made her appearance on the canvas-covered court of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue, yesterday afternoon. The girl from Pasadena, Cal., who two seasons ago carried off the English honors, appeared to be in the best of trim for her contemplated conquest of the British tournaments and championships again this year. So eager was Miss Sutton to practice on the court that although it had not been her intention to play she could not resist contesting a few sets with a number of the tennis devotees who were on hand, including Karl H. Behr, Jr., William A. Larned, Miss Sears, and Miss Fenno.

While Miss Sutton was not as consistently steady as usual, nothing was lacking in that abounding vigor for which her game is remarkable. Her drives were splendidly played with length and speed, and she seemed to have completly mastered all of the strokes in a truly masculine manner. No record was kept of the sets in which she played, as they were only for practice. She will compete next week in several of the regularly scheduled tournaments of the indoor series.

The California girl was surprised at the late April snowstorm. She said that she had been playing at the Ojai Valley championships in Southern California with success, and that out there the tennis weather had been perfect. She made the suggestion that in order to get early training the American international team members would find the Pacific Coast an ideal spot with plenty of opportunities for play long before the snow and ice melt from the courts around New York.

Four teams will compete in the men's doubles tournament, which will begin this afternoon on the rink courts. The list includes Beals C. Wright and Irving C. Wright, Raymond D. Little, and Karl H. Behr, Jr., Edgar W. Leonard and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, and William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr. This series will be played as a round robin, two matches each day.

GOLFERS PLAY IN SNOW.

Travis and Travers Opponents To-day for Garden City Cup.

Walter J. Travis and Jerome D. Travers, who have been rivals for tournament honors in many previous events, will be the opponents to-day on the Garden City links in the final round for the chief trophy. Travers is the present metropolitan champion, and he intends to make a strong bid to retain his title in the coming local championship next month. Both played such excellent golf yesterday in the second day's contests of the Garden City Tournament, despite the severe conditions, that the chances for victory for either are practically even. The cold weather and heavy snowfall yesterday practiently eliminated every one from the links except the survivors, who still had something to play for.

Nearly all the players suffered from numbed fingers in the morning, and Travers's club actually dropped from his hands as he was preparing to put on the eleventh green, costing him the hole. He was playing Arden M. Robbins of St. Andrew's at the time, but had so good a lead that by winning the next two holes he took the match by the good score of 6 up and 5 to play.

In the semi-final round Travers played against Marshal Whitlatch, the young Montclair golfer who won the low score prize on the previous day. The expectant close match did not materialize, for the local champion had everything his way from the start, and won by 7 up and 6 to play. Travis also had the game all his own way in the afternoon, beating Charles B. Macdonald, the first United States champion, by 7 up and 5 to play. Travis completely outclassed Harold Sands, who won all the big cups at Aiken this season, by finishing the game at the eleventh hole.

With few exceptions all the victors won by high scores. The only match that closed even on the home ground, necessitating an extra hole, was in the President's Cup event between J. G. Batterson of Fox Hills and M. K. Smith of Morris County. The beaten eights for the first and second trophies were paired for special cups, making a total of five cups during the day. The results were:

Garden City Cup, Second Round.—Jerome D. Travers, Montclair, beat Arden M. Robbins, St. Andrew's, 7 up and 5 to play; Marshall Whitlatch, Montclair, beat F. S. LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Silk and Paper Wall Hangings Pay 25 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Marion De Vries, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a protest filed by R. F. Downing & Co. of New York regarding the rate of duty applicable to wall hangings composed of a paper backing and silk facing.

The merchandise was assessed by the Collector of Customs at 50 per cent. as manufactures of silk. The importers alleged a rate of 25 per cent. under the provision in the Dingley tariff for paper hangings. This claim is sustained.

A decision was handed down by Eugene G. Hay overruling a claim filed by the H. G. McKerrow Company of Boston, it being held that so-called wool-washing residue used for laying dust on boulevards or macadamized roads is dutiable at 20 per cent. under the provision in the law for non-enumerated manufactured commodities. The importer's contention for a 10 per cent. duty is denied.

Other importers' protests overruled were filed by Marcellino, Porez & Co., G. W. Sheldon & Co., Hauth, Nachod & Kuhne, Hensel, Bruckman & Lorbacher, M. Gardner & Co, Holcombe & Co., Samstag & Hilder Brothers, Habricht, Braun & Co., and others, New York; F. E. Ketchum, Marquette, Mich.; B. Illfelder & Co., Philadelphia; Lyon & Healy Chicago, and Mattoon & Co., San Francisco.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

MARY ALEXANDER.—Miss Mary Alexander, residing at 120 West Forty-seventh Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $3,616, and no assets. Of the liabilities $1,814 is for rent of three places, and the balance is for flowers, cab hire, millinery, milk, gas, electric light, borrowed money, medical attendance, and funeral expenses of a relative. The debts were contracted in 1906 and 1906.

CHARLES HOLDORF.—Charles Holdorf, a carpenter residing on Zulette Avenue, Westchester, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $2,204, contracted in this city in 1901, and no assets. Magdalena Holdorf also filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,442, and no assets. There are eleven judgments against Holdorf and three against Mrs. Holdorf.

MELZER & LERNER.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Jacob Melzer and Louis Lerner, who compose the firm of Melzer & Lerner, manufacturers of furs, at 76 East Houston Street, by these creditors: Altman & Weinberg, $596; Rosenfeld & Etelson, $838, and Barel Barnett, $275. It was alleged that they are insolvent, have transferred property to creditors to prefer them, and have concealed themselves so that no legal process could be served upon them. They were in business about one year.

STONE & BECKER.—Judge O'Gorman has appointed Henry Stone receiver for the assets of the firm of Stone & Becker, wholesale dealers in jewelry, at 24 Forsyth Street, in a suit brought by Stone against his partner, Isadore. W. Becker, for a dissolution of the partnership, which was formed on March 10, 1906. It was stated that Becker is in an asylum. Mr. Stone placed their affairs before their creditors several weeks ago, and asked an extension of eighteen months, as he was desirous of continuing the business. Their sales for the year were about $100,000. Liabilities are $30,000, and nominal assets $35,000.

Stocks Dull and Heavy — Call Money Rates, 2@3 Per Cent.

MARKET ALMOST STAGNANT

Banks Gain Cash on Currency Movements, but Expansion in Loans May Again Affect the Statement.

Yesterday's stock market differed from that of Thursday only in that a few thousand shares more stock were traded in and prices were a little heavier. An addition of 10,000 shares, however, to a volume of 310,000 shares, which was the total of Thursday's trading, means very little in the way of activity, and such fluctuations as occurred in prices were, save in a dozen instances, confined to fractions. Closing quotations revealed as many losses as gains in the list of stocks traded in during the day. The professionals were again in charge of the market, but their energy is plainly diminishing under the public indifference. An effort nevertheless was made to stir the market with further advices from the crop territory of an unfavorable tenor, but it was unsuccessful in spite of the fact that in the grain markets wheat ended the day substantially higher. Some attention was devoted to the reversal of the sentiment created in London by the publication of the Exchequer budget on Thursday. The wave of optimism, after running through a part of yesterday's business, subsided rather abruptly, leaving markets fairly despondent. This change was due in part, probably, to the offerings of German bills in the London market. The whole matter seems to have been somewhat overdone sentimentally if it is measured by the success of the offering of London County stock.

Renewals of call loans were made at 3 per cent. for the second time, and while this is still a comparatively easy rate, its establishment at this time is important since it should help to stem the withdrawals of interior funds from the loan market. Interest rates at interior cities are now well above those in force here, and this fact, together with the ordinary procedure of inland institutions in canceling loans when rates fall below the 2 per cent. allowed by the banks, will have much bearing upon to-day's bank statement. Preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week indicate a gain of some $3,000,000 in cash on all movements, but on transactions with the interior there has been a substantial loss, and this, together with the shifting of the burden of carrying loans to the shoulders of local institutions, may well result in another enlargement of the loan item in to-day's statement. There have also been several extensive syndicate operations, including that involving the payment of $30,000,000 to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Traders who found their way into Wall Street yesterday could find nothing cheerful in the situation and were inclined to believe that this was the beginning of a long period of dullness. "We shall have it worse than this before very long," was the comment in many offices. This deduction is based on the assumption that usually active operators are either crippled or out of the market for the present. Every house can show a list of clients who have dropped the game either permanently or temporarily, and in almost every case the men who have done so have been stimulating influences in the market. The casual trader in a few hundred shares of stock cuts no figure in any market from the point of view of total transactions. He is a helpful factor, but his influence is not very far reaching unless there are plenty of him.

Weather conditions are attracting attention even in quarters where skepticism of crop scares is very pronounced. The peculiar brand of weather which we are having here has emphasized a growing uneasiness as to the possibility of accuracy in the serious reports from some of the Western States. Unseasonable weather is reported from every section, and this, coupled with the reported "green bugs" in wheat, has raised the question of a possible adverse influence which real crop news may exercise in the immediate future. The strength of wheat yesterday showed that traders in that cereal felt that there is some fact in the stories of crop damage. It is too early to form any idea of the real situation in the Winter wheat belt, but the condition of the crop even now will not help in a campaign for better prices in the stock market.

While they may keep their opinions to themselves, brokers do not like to have their customers trade very freely in industrials. They are not adverse to liberal purchases of these securities, provided, of course, that railroad stocks are also being bought. A broker has a problem to face when a customer buys 5,000 or 10,000 shares of an industrial issue. He cannot place the whole amount in a loan, so the plan usually adopted in the event of his carrying few railroad stocks is to borrow a block of some railroad issue, split his industriale and his railroads thus obtained into several loans, and thus satisfy the banks. He can borrow the railroad stocks usually, and the interest rate is about the current call rate. Sometimes the broker is able to make a special loan with individuals on the floor, and blocks of industrials can be placed without further trouble.

***

Apropos of this question of industrials and loans is the question of "all industrial" loans. A broker has to pay a substantially higher rate of interest for a six months' "all-industrial" loan than for a standard loan. Assuming that call money is about 2½ per cent., and he has to pay from 5½ to 6 per cent. for a time loan with all industrial collateral he does not feel very pleasant if after he has made his "all industrial" tims loan for 6 per cent. his customer should see fit to sell out in a day or so after the time loan. He would have to substituts other collateral, possibly bonds or good railroad stocks, and loss the advantage of their specific borrowing capacity at a lower rate. Of course all these things are for the broker to look out for, and the client does not worry about his principal.

Some brokerage houses said yesterday that they have noticed within the last week or so odd lots of steel coming on the market that were purchesed apparently in the slump of 1903. The deduction they make from this fact is that many persons who are not intimately connected with the financial district ars worried over the talk of industrial depression and the possibility of a reaction similar to that of four years ago. Steel stocks bought at that time have only received partial dividends, of course, but they would be held in the hope of a 4 per cent. dividend were it not for this uneasiness precipitated by gossip and comment, which the striking figures of the Steel Corporation have been unable to nullify.

***

Less is heard at present of pools in stocks than for some time. This is merely due to the stagnant market conditions. Although the break in March was violent, the belief obtains that most of the pools weatbered the storm although hurt consisdrably. These that have cms this far safely have still hefore them the necessity of getting rid of their holdinge, and many professionals are figuring on their ability to do so. Should they decide that there is any urgency in letting go pool stocks, a violent drive at the market would be sure to result. Some of the professionals who feel that way ars perfectly frank in expressing their opinion as to what they will do and what they hope to accomplish.

Bankers are loath to express an opinion as to the amount of railroad borrowing still necessary. That much borrowing will he needed before the end of the year seems to be so taken for granted that the banking fraternity will not reduce to figures the suggested needs of the railroads. Several roads are especially mentioned, and in some cases the official denials are accepted merely as statements intended to describe this gossip as at least premature. One big bank admits that borrowing on a liberal ecals is likely to be attmpted, but it is said that many attempts to obtein funds will not come to the public notice. Only the successful efforts will become public property.

REST FOR HENRY C. DEMING.

Henry C. Deming, who resigned the Presidency of the Mercantile Trust Company on Wednesday, has announced his intention of going abroad for an extended vacation in the hope of restoring his shattered health. He had been twenty-seven years in the company's service, and close attention to his work hae seriously impaired his health. His nerves have been affected hy the strain and his withdrawal from harness at last became imperative.

The directors have taken no action toward electing a new President, and it is expected that Vice-President John T. Terry will continue to act as executive head of the company until the next meeting of the board, which is scheduled for May 15.

The retirement of Mr. Deming has revived the old rumors of a consolidation of the Mercantile and Equitable Trust Companies, which have had currency ever since the control of the Equitable Life paseed into the hands of Thomas F. Ryan. The cloee connection of the insurance company with the two trust companies was brought out at the insurance investigation, and since Mr. Ryan is the dominant factor in both trust companies, it has long been expected that the two institutions would be made one. Officials of both trust companies said yesterday, however, that the merger is no nearer accomplishment than it was months ago. When it occurs it is expected that the Equitable Trust Company will lose its identity in the older institution.

Tobacco Trust Takes Up More Bonds.

With the announcement yesterday by the American Tobacco Company of the purchase and cancellation of $500,000 more of its outstanding 4 per cent. bonds, the total of such cancellations as reported since the first of the year hae been brought up to $4,000,000. All of the bonds thus canceled have been hought in the open market in pursuance of a policy inaugurated by the company last year.

Interest in Curb Market Shown in Increased Trading Throughout List.

DAVIS-DALY BUOYANT

Curb trading picked up yeterday during the morning session and it looked for the first few hours as if the day would make a record in point of activity equal to the best of the past winter. As the day progressed, however, the volume of business diminished, though at the close the transactions, in the mining list at least, mounted up to a considerable total. Prices were well maintained, and a number of substantial gains were recorded. In the industrial list an unusual volume of activity developed in American Tobacco, which sold 420 shares, from 310 up to 325. Davis-Daly Estate was one of the most active in the mining list, transactions totaling 11,300 sharee. After an opening of ⅛ up at 15, the price was put to 16¼, from which recessions before the close carried it back to 15¾, a net gain of ⅞. Boston Copper, which was another of the mining stocks which took an upward spurt on Thursday, opened yesterday ⅛ down at 27½, and was weak through ths trading. The close, after sales of 4,000, was at 27⅛.

ASK MINING CO. RECEIVER.

New York Creditors Say Mexican Concern Has Never Been Made to Pay.

Vice Chancellor Stevens, in Newark yesterday, signed an order directing the officers of the Vichachi Mining Company of Mexico to show cause on April 30 why a receiver for the company should not be appointed.

Application for the order was made by E. M. and W. D. Day, counsel representing Henry Ward and Ilma M. Catlin of New York, and other creditors who may subsequently come in after receiving a notice from E. P. Elliott, the Secretary of the company, who is located in Mexico City, which reads:

Must have at least $20,000 gold, besides funds to pay back loan of $5,000 and bills aggregating $5,000 more—that or quit.

Besides the demand for the $20,000 gold, the Secretary's notice calls for a meeting to be held May 6 at 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, when resolutions to authorize a bond issue are to be submitted. The mining property, the bill says, has never been made to pay, although showing good indications of mineral value.

IMPORTS OF DRY GOODS.

Imports of dry goods at the Port of New York for the week were valued at $3,154,629, as against $3,712,580 for the previous week, and $2,934,156 for the corresponding week last year. The total value of the dry goods marketed was $3,091,668, as against $3,572,832 for the previous week, and $2,794,927 for the corresponding week last year.

LONDON, April 19.—The supplies of money were abundant in the market today and the demand was quiet. Discounts were easy.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was dull. In the opinion of the operators the budget presented to Parliament yesterday should favor British securities, but the addition to the sinking fund had already been discounted and the numerous new issues effectually checked the broadening of business for the time being and also caused declines, especially in consols, which were again sold to-day in order to enable participation in the new loans which are to be floated.

Foreigns barely moved, in spite of the steadiness of the Paris market. Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 closed at 101½.

Americans maintained their steadiness, with prices a fraction over parity in the forenoon, but without much stock changing hands. Later, owing to the colorless New York advices, the market became apathetic, with narrow movements, and closed dull.

Bullion amounting to £94,000 was taken into the Bank of England on balance today.

Money, 1½@2 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3½@3¼ per cent.; for three months' bills it is 3⅝@3½ per cent.

PARIS, April 19.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were firm, but trading was inactive throughout. Russian imperial 4s closed at 74.60 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 496.

Exchange on London, 25f. 21½c. for checks.

BERLIN, April 19.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was very dull. Americans were steady.

Discount rates—Short bills, 4 per cent.; three months' bills, 4½ per cent.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Strong Market Indicated for Fourth Quarter Iron—Foreign Iron Strong.

An interesting feature of the iron market in the Pittsburg district is the purchaso of 5,000 tons of basic pig and 2,500 tons of Bessemer for fourth quarter delivery at a price reported at $21 valley by a consumer which only a few weeks ago filled its third quarter requirements at this same price. Trade observers take this sale as significaant of this firmness which mey be expected in fourth quarter iron when the buying begins in earnest for this period. Commenting on the general situation, Rogers, Brown & Co. say:

Since the heavy sales of Bessemer ten days ago interest has centred chiefly in foundry grades. Sales are irregular, dull in one of the markets, and conspicuously active in others. But confidence on the part of all buyers is moro oronounced, and interest in the last half of the year seems to be spreading. Sales during tho first half of April have been surprisingly large, and several of the large inquiries mentioned a week ago, which are still pending, will, when closed, absorb a large slice of the tonnage still available for the third and fourth quarters.

Prices for distant delivery on domestic irons, though not, remain unchanged. Premiums for spot delivery continue to be pushed further and further ahead. Meanwhile interest in British irons for May and June arrival is more active. Advices from Middlesborough report an activity in shipping out of warrant yards absolutely without precedent. Vessels are being loaded for Germany and the United States as fast as the inadequate dock facilities will permit. Middlesborough stocks have been reduced during the last three months at a more rapid rate than ever before. The British situation seems good, and quotations on warrants have shown almost daily advances for the last ten days.

No Financial Crisis in Chile.

VALPARAISO, Chile, April 19.—The financial condition of Chile is not serious. The banks are in good condition, but ars limiting credits to speculators, and this has caused a temporary stringency. Thers has been some liquidation and a fall in the price of stocks, and there has been a decline in the rate of exchange on London, owing to large imports, general speculation, and unfounded rumors of the intention of the Government to purchase additional war vessels. Exchange has risen to 12½d. There may be a temporary reaction, but it is not regarded as serious.

Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 167 failures in the United Statee during the week, against 194 for the previous week and 167, 183, 199, and 152 for the corresponding weeks of 1906 to 1903. The Middle States had 63, New England 18, Southern 25, Western 30, Northwestern 8, Pacific 22, and Territories 1. Canada had 18, against 28 for the preceding week. About 87 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less and 7 per cent. had from $5,000 to $20,000 capital.

Big Verdict for Bank Depositors.

A jury in the Supreme Court, sitting at Richmond, S. I., returned a verdict of $183,000 last night against the estate of the late August Prentice, the President and a Director of the defunct Bank of Staten Island. The bank closed after Otto Ahlmann, the Treasurer anr cashier, committed suicide. He looted the bank before his death. Receiver Davenport sued the Prentice estate for the full amount of Ahlmann's defalcation, setting up that Prentice should have prevented the stealing by Ahlmann. If the verdict is sustained the bank depositors will get about 70 per cent.

CITY BREVITIES.

Col. Edward S. Fowler, Appraiser of the Port, has announced the appointment of Nathaniel G. Van Doren as his private secretary to succeed Henry M. Day, who was promoted in February to be Special Deputy Appraiser.

The Building Code Revision Commission will hold a public hearing for those connected with the building trades, ou the revision of the Building Code on May 8 at 2 P. M. in the Aldermanic Chamber of the City Hall. Separate hearings will be held for engineers, ironworkers, architects, and others interested.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Active, Firmer, Closes Very Steady at 7 to 12 Points Gain.

WEATHER IN COTTON STATES.

North Carolina and South Carolina—Fair Saturday; Sunday rain, fresh northwesterly winds, becoming easterly.

Georgia—Rain Saturday and Sunday; fresh and variable winds.

Western Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana—Rain Saturday and Sunday; brisk northeast to north winds, becoming southeasterly.

Eastern Texas—Rain and warmer Saturday; Sunday partly cloudy; brisk northeasterly winds, shifting to southerly.

Tennessee—Fair Saturday; Sunday rain, continued cold.

The cotton market was more active and firmer, with the close very steady at a net advance of 7@12 points, which placed prices at the highest figure since the early part of last month.

The market opened steady at an advance of 3@8 points, with the near months relatively firm owing to better csbles than expected. There was active covering, owing to the light movement, firm spot markets, and good English spot sales, and the market gradually worked higher, with the South buying the new crop months. Interior stocks lost heavily for the week, and exports again exceeded port receipts for the day, while the into sight figures suggested a bullish visible supply statement for to-day.

Supt. King's weekly total crop movement figure follow: Port receipts, 9,257,175 bales, against 7,047,070 last year; overland to mills and Canada, 1,071,570, (7,584 added overland season, correction at St. Louis,) against 824,241 last year; Southern mill takings, 1,841,000, against 1,680,000 last year; stock at interior towns in excess of Sept. 1, 301,744, against 264,859 last year; brought into sight thus far for season, 12,471,499, against 9,825,170 last year.

The total crop movement is for 231 days this season, against 232 days last season.

SUITS AGAINST FITZGERALD.

Brooklyn Justice to be Summoned to White Plains Court.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 19.—More trouble over the way he managed the money of Margaret M. Slevin is in store for Justice Thomas W. Fitzgerald of Special Sessions, in Queens, and he will be ordered to appear in White Plains to explain many things to Judge Tompkins.

The matter was brought to the attention of Justice Tompkins this morning on application of Margaret M. Slevin for an order to show cause why the Justice should not pay over certain moneys to her. In her application the petitioner alleges that she retained Justice Fitzgerald as her counsel, and that under his advice and direction she invested much money in mortgages. She says she was told that this money was in first mortgages, but later found that some of it had been invested in second mortgages, and in one instance a third mortgage.

She cites several cases where mortgages were never satisfied by her, although she learns they had been paid. She also says that on several occasions blank papers were sent her by the Justice to be signed, and she now believes that some of those may have been blank satisfactions of mortgages.

When she asked Mr. Fitzgerald about these matters she alleges he told her that he was ill and that he had not had time to attend to his business properly, and he also made several other excuses which she says were very unsatisfactory.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 19.—News that an English sailing ship, displaying the codo signal letters J B F G, was dismasted and in need of a tow off the Nantucket Shoals lightship, was received at the Naval Training Station here today by Commander Albert Gleaves, commandant of the station. The news came in a wireless message from Rear Admiral Coghlan, commandant of the New York Navy Yard, who had received a wireless dispatch from the French steamer La Provence.

Commander Gleaves notified a tugboat office in New Bedford, but as it was a holiday in Massachusetts no tug could be obtained. Providence declined on the ground that it was out of their district, and an appeal was made to New London.

The vessel, although dismasted, did not display signals of distress, and for that reason no Government steamer was sent from here.

MISS TOMLINSON A SUICIDE.

BOSTON, April 19.—Miss Mary E. Tomlinson of Concord, N. H., committed suicide here to-day by jumping from a window in an upper story of the Parker House. It is believed that she was demented.

She came to Boston yesterday morning and went to the home of Mrs. Ida Berkman at 35 Barton Street. When Mrs. Berkman, to whom she was a stranger, asked her what she wanted she replied that she was looking for a drink of water. A few moments later she pretended to be a deaf-mute. It was necessary to summon the police to eject her.

Miss Tomlinson was a sister of Irving C. Tomlinson, one of the readers of the Christian Science Church of Boston, who is one of the defendants in the suit for an accounting of the property of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy.

CONCORD, N. H., April 19.—Miss Tomlinson was prominent in the Christian Science denomination, and up to a year ago was Second Reader in the Concord church. When the term of her brother, the Rev. Irving C. Tomlinson, as First Reader expired she also retired. Since then she had been active as a healer. She formerly lived in Hudson, Mich. She was 65 years old. She leaves four brothers, one of whom is the Rev. Vincent E. Tomlinson of Worcester, Mass.

To Name Receiver for Uncle Sam Co.

TOPEKA, April 19.—Judge Pollock of the United States District Court announced to-day that he would grant the petition of complaining stockholders and appoint a receiver for the Uncle Sam Oil Company, whose Secretary-Treasurer, H. H. Tucker, Jr., was recently indicted on the charge of using the mails to defraud. The company has 10,000 stockholders. A statement, issued on April 5, showed receipts from the sale of stock of over $1,000,000.

New Line to Kalamazoo.

CHICAGO, April 19.—Chicago is to have a new route to the Michigan peninsula, by way of South Haven and the Kalamazoo, Lake Shore & Chicago, a new railroad incorporated on Jan. 15, and owned by stockholders who own the steamers of the Chicago & South Haven line. The new line will give Chicago a route to Kalamazoo competitive with the Michigan Central, which heretofore had a practical monopoly of the business.

Lumber Combine in Canada.

OTTAWA, April 19.—The committee appointed to investigate the alleged existence of a combine in the lumber trade of the Canadian West reported to Parliament to-day. The committee unanimously agreed that the prices of lumber are excessive and that there is a combine in the Retail Lumbermen's Association and the Lumbermen's Manufacturers' Association.

GAVE $100,000 TO WIRE TAPPERS

THIEVES HAD FALLING OUT

One Who Didn't Get His Share Said to Have "Squealed"—Charles Gondorf Under Arrest.

Through the arrest of Charles Gondorf, sometimes known as Cbarles Earle, the police hope to ehow how William F. Walker, the defaulting Treasurer of the New Britain (Conn.) Savings Bank, who disappeared on Feb. 10, leaving a shortage of over $600,000, was stripped in this city of over $100,000 by means of wire-tapping and other get-rich-quick schemes.

When arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday Gondorf was held on charges of grand larceny and receiving stolen goods. He was held on a short affidavit made by Detective Sergeant Vallely of the Detective Bureau, and on the statement of Howard S. Gans of the law firm of Gans & Iselin, which has been retained by the Directors of the New Britain bank. In addition to the statement of Mr. Gans, there was one by Norman T. Bailey of the Pinkerton Detective Agency.

For some time there have been rumors that Walker had been defrauded of a large share of his stolen money hy various wildcat financial adventurers. According to these rumors, some one on the inside who did not get his fair share of the plunder in revenge betrayed the scheme.

Gondorf, who is well known about the Tenderloin as a sporting man, was arrested on Thursday night as he was leaving a bakery near his home, in upper Broadway.

Walker had been investing in wildcat mining schemes in this city. With the hope of retrieving himself he was induced as far back as last September to go into the "wire-tapping game." Though now and then he was allowed to make a small winning in order that the sharpers might induce him to go deeper into the game, he was eventually stripped of everything. It is said that $85,000 of the $100,000 worth of securities he lost has been recovered through a reputable banking firm through which they were negotiated.

Gondorf was arrested with a view to finding out whether or not he knew how Walker was swindled and how the securities were negotiated. The affidavit on which Gondorf was held included two counts, the first charging grand larceny and the second reciting that "the defendant is charged by the Savings Bank of New Britain, Conn., of receiving stolen goods."

Gondorf's attorney obtained William R. Nelson, commonly known as Bob Neleon, a Seventh Avenue saloon keeper and a former Tenderloin hondsman, to go on the $20,000 bail hond. Although Nelson asserted that he could qualify in the sum of $250,000, Magistrate Barlow refused to accept him as bondsman.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., April 19.—Secretary Charles B. Oldershaw of the Savings Bank of New Britain went to New York to-day to make affidavit to the amount of the stealings of Former Treasurer William F. Walker. The evidence, it is understood, will be used in the case against Charles Earle, who was arrested in New York yesterday in connection with a wire-tapping scheme by which Walker is thought to have been swindled out of thousands of dollars.

CORTELYOU IN WALL STREET.

Visits the Custom House and Confers on Routine Matters.

Secretary Cortelyou visited the Custom Houee yesterday for the first time since his arrival in New York. He spent half an hour in consultation with the officials of the port. It was said after the meeting that nothing but the routine affairs of ths department had come up for discuesion, though the plans of the new Secretary of the Treasury for sweeping reform in the methods of inspecting the baggage of home-coming Americans had been referred to informally.

The inspection of the helongings of passengers on the transatlantio liners is one of the most important duties devolving upon the customs officers of this port, and le always the subject of more or less comment in the conferencee that are usually held when the Secretary of the Treasury visits the New York Cuetom House. Whatever plans Mr. Cortelyou may have under consideration for remedying existing conditions were not taken up officially with the authorities here.

CAME 3,000 MILES TO WED.

Then Betty Drecher Found That Her Fiance Was Missing.

Betty Drecher, who is 22 years old, journeyed more than 3,000 miles from Hanover to meet and wed Frank Thormes, a chief steward on one of the Hamburg-American liners. She expected to find him "waiting at the church" yesterday when she arrived on the Batavia. But he was not there.

She was taken to Ellis Ieland. As she had ample funds and as there was no reason why she should be detained she was alowed to go to the Lutheran Miselon Home, in State Street.

Soon after a young man called to see her. He said he was a friend of the miasing fiancé. The latter, he called to say, had been unable to "lay off" for the ceremony and had been forced to sail with his veasel, and was now somewhere near Kingston.

The young woman was angry at first and declared that the missing swain could remain away as long as he pleased. Then she stamped her foot, and womanlike, changed her mind. In consequence, her friends at the Lutheran home are preparing to celebrate the marriage ceremony.

SUES TO RECOVER HER HOME.

Mrs. Wooster Says She Was Defrauded in "Bible Club" Transaction.

Declaring that she was induced to exchange her home at 732 Macon Street for stock in the Economy Bible Club, with offices at 275 Water Street, Manhattan, and defrauded in the transaction, Mrs. Grace E. Wooster filed papers yesterday in the County Clerk's office, Brooklyn, in an action to compel Charles W. Yates to pay her $1,705 and restore to her the Macon Street house.

Mrs. Wooster, a widow, who lived for twelve years at the Macon Street address, says she met Yates in 1904 and that on Oct. 25 of that year he inducsd her to exchange her $5,000 equity in the house for a one-fifth interest in the Economy Bible Club, which, she says, Yates told her had been capitalized at $25,000. She was assured, she says, that the Bible concern would pay her 12 per cent. in dividends annually.

She decided that this was a better investment than kepeing her money tied up in the house, so she transferred the property to Yates, she says, and received $5,000 worth of stock in the Economy Bible Club.

Mrs. Wooster says that since parting with her house, two and a half years ago, she has received neither dividends, interest, nor income of any kind from the Bible concern. Shortly after she acquired the stock she says the name of the corporation was changed to Wilfrid Smith Company. As a result, she says, shs was defrauded out of her interest in the concern and her stock became worthless.

The $1,705 for which Mrs. Wooster sues is the rent she says the defendant has collected since she deeded to him her home.

It was alleged on behalf of Nutley & Co. that the officers of the Cloth Examiners' Union were sending circulare to people in the clothing trade in which it wns stated that the concern was employing non-union labor. Decieion was reserved.

PLEA BY JEROME SENDS MAN TO JAIL

IS AN OLD OFFENDER

Sullivan's Appeal to the Court Impressive and Almost Obtains His Freedom.

At the suggestion of District Attorney Jerome, Judge Crain of General Sessions yesterday revoked his decision admitting Daniel Sullivan to a suspension of sentence for robbery in the second degree, and sent him to the penitentiary for two months. It was shown that Sullivan had already been convicted three times.

Sullivan is a plumber, who for the last few weeks has been living at 509 West 179th Street. On March 12 he saw George Herrlinger, a brewery worker of 123 Wadeworth Avenue, coming out of a saloon at 179th Street and Ameterdam Avenue, apparently in need of assistance. Sullivan helped him along until he got him in front of his own house.

There he struck Herrlinger and robbed him of $20. Herrlinger struggled with him and they both fell against the area door. Mrs. Herrlinger opened it and came to the rescue of her husband. Sullivan struck her in the face with his fist. The police arrived before Sullivan could get away and he was arrested. Some of the money was found that night on the snow in the area, and more was picked up next day.

Sullivan was arraigned before Judge Crain in Part Three of General Sessions last Tuesday on the charges of robbery in the second degree, grand larceny in the first dsgree, and assault in the second degree. He was tried on the first count and found guilty.

He was brought up for sentence yesterday morning with another batch of prisoners. Seated on the bench with Judge Crain was Jamee J. Hagan, formerly Warden of the Tombs, and a Tammany district leader.

When Judge Crain first took his seat on the hench a few months ago and received a floral emblem, Mr. Hagan was one of those who were present to congratulate him upon his elevation and to point the moral of the inscription on the flowers, "Reward for Loyalty."

When Sullivan'e turn came the Judge asked if any one knew him. A man named Penny arose in the back of the court and said that he was formerly Sullivan's employer and would be glad to take him on again at any time. Then the prisoner himself was put in the witness chair, although when he was on trial he had not testified on his own behalf, and made the following statsment:

As I was on my way home with a friend of mine I saw this man in a saloon, and as I come with the friend of mine from the saloon, he said to me: "There will be an easy mark to get his money." Well, it is never my intentions to do anytbing like that, and as I passed my home this man was lying across the street, with a man evidently trying to arouse him, and he asked me to lift him up, which I was my intention. As I brought him home, up as far as the corner, he insisted on going alone, and I, not knowing the man or being acquainted with him, I left him go, and I thought still to follow my act of charity and see him home, so I still kept my eye on him, and as he turned into the gateway leading to the cellar, and as I was about to turn to go back home, I heard a sound as though he was falling downstairs. I goes back to the gateway and looked down and saw his form lying helplessly at the bottom of the stairs. I went down and lifted him up on the street again, and asked him if he lived there or stayed there, and as I was raising him to his feet, I don't know whatever put it into my head, but I put my hand in his pocket and I took his money, but my conscience would not let me keep it, and I put the money back again.

As soon as Sullivan finished his story, Judge Crain suspended sentence. Sullivan was walking out of court when Assistant District Attorney Appleton jumped to his feet and objected. He read the man's record, which was:

Judge Crain then ordered Sullivan once more brought into court. Assistant District Attorney Appleton asked for delay in order that he might consult authorities and despatched ons of his attendants for Mr. Jerome. He atates that as he gave this order Mr. Hagan said to him:

However, Mr. Jerome came immediately and discussed the legal questions involved with the Judge.

"I don't want to exceed my legal powers," said Judge Crain. "Now what I suggest is that I suspend sentence, and then you can bring mandamus proceedings to make me take action. We'll have a test cass then."

"I don't want to do that," replied the District Attorney. "Of course there may be some divine influence which will make the man reform under a suspended sentsnce, but my experiencs is that men liks the prieoner are not apt to reform."

"Well, I ehould not like to exceed my powers," said the Judge. "I'll revoke my suspension of eentence and eentence him."

Then Sullivan was called to the bar and received a sentence of two months instead of a possible fifteen years.

NO MERCY SHOWN TO GUN CARRIERS

ONE MAN GETS 16 MONTHS

Head of Italian Labor Union Calls on All Members to Disarm and Obey the Law.

Severe sentences were again meted out yesterday in the courts against thoss found carrying concealed weapone. Judge Rosaleky, in General Sessions, sentenced Carlo de Sanctle, a barber, to the State Prison for one year and four months for carrying a loaded revolver and a dirk. Herman Schwartz of 126 Cannon Street, who had heen arrested on the charge of robbery from a truck, escaped from that accusation only to go to the penitentiary for eix months for carrying a loaded revolver.

Eight additional indictments were handed down by ths Grand Jury on similar charges, and five more are pending before the Grand Jury, which will report Monday.

Gilchrist Stewart, the colored lawyer and member of the Republican County Committee, was brought before Magistrate Walsh, in the West Side Court, yesterday, charged with being drunk and disorderly. At the time of his arrest he had with him John Johnson, a colored editor and publisher, of 324 East Nineteenth Street, who was held on the charge of carrying a revolver concealed under his vest.

According to Patrolman Connor of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, Stewart and Johnson entered a lunchroom at 80 Amsterdam Avenue. Stewart began picking the raisins out of a bowl of rice. The clerk told bim to stop, and he only dug the further into the dish.

The clerk pushed him from the counter, and he turned to Johnson and said:

"Give me that thing, quick."

Johnson reached down inside his vest and pulled out a pearl-handled Colt's revolver, fully loaded. Hs was quickly disarmed.

Stewart admitted having been drunk and was fined $10. Johnson was held in $1,000 bail for exanination to-day.

Detective Frank Casassa brushed against Anton Marirrano of Paterson, N. J., on the Forty-second Street elevated station on Sixth Avenue. He felt a revolver in Marirrano's pocket, and took bim to Jefferson Market Court, where the prisoner said to Magistrate Barlow:

"I carry $400 or $500 all the time, and need the gun to protect it."

He actually had $400 on bim, but he was held in $500 for trial.

Edward Manning, who manages an automobile garage in West Seventy-firet Street, was arreated yesterday for carrying a revolver. His lawyer objected to having him classed with Italians, but Judge Olmsted, in Special Sessions, cut him off sbort and declared that he had knew no discrimination. However, as the revolver was broken, Manning was allowed to go with a $25 fine. One Italian went to the island for three months and three others for two months.

It was Magistrate Crane, in the Morrisania Court, who had the first case before him of selling revolvers to a minor. Oscar Hanssn, a clerk in his mother's store, at 3,134 Third Avenue, sold a cheap revolver to Eddie Rueher, a lad of 15 years. His father saw it and took his son and the gun to the police station.

Hansen was arrested, and Magistrate Crane lectured him severely. He held him in $500 bail for trial.

Tito Pascelli, President of the Italian Rockmen and Excavators' Union, came out yesterday as the ally of the police in their crusade. He was one of the delegates to the Peace Conference, and has taken to heart the lessons of Carnegie Hall.

He issued an order yesterday that at all meetings of the union every member will be eearched and any carrying arms will have them taken away, and they will be turned over to the police. All locals will eearch their members before their meetings commence. This order was posted in the headquarters of the union at 2,157 First Avenue, and sent to every local within its jurisdiction. It contains an appeal to the members of whatever nationality to obey the law and to remove from the Italian race the stigma which the habit of carrying concealed weapons has cast upon it.

PATERSON IS AROUSED.

Court Says Future Gun Carriers Will Go to Prison.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, April 19.—Judge Scott in the Passaic County Court to-day served notice that hereafter pereone brought before him for carrying concealed weapons would be sent to State prison. The court said that this offense must be checked, and he would do bie share.

Luigi Stifano was arraigned on a charge of etabbing Joseph Maloni with a stiletto. Stifano escaped a State prieon sentence because of the many representations of his previous good character, and a fine of $250 was imposed, in default of which Stifano will remain in jail at the rate of $1 a day.

Judge Scott was emphatic in declaring, however, that in future no leniency would be shown to prisoners accussed of using or carrying deadly weapone.

CAMORRA'S CHIEF CAUGHT.

Detectives Petrosini and Anchiopli, in making a raid on Wednesday night in the course of the crusade against Italiane for carrying concealed weapons, arrested a man in the sub-baeement of this house at 108 Mulherry Street who admitted that he was Enrico Alfano. Petroeino said the man was wanted in Italy for the murder of Cuocolo and his wife.

Alfano was head of the Camorra at the time, and Cuocolo was his rival. At Alfano'a instigation, it is eaid, both Cuocolo and his wife were condemned to death, their murder being later accomplished. Alfano disappeared.

Alfano was arreated only after a desperate struggle. He was locked up at Police Headquarters as a suspicious person. The Italian Government was notified, and the prisoner is being held for extradition.

NAPLES, April 19.—The receipt of the news here that Enrico Alfano, called "Erricone," the head of the Camorra, has been arrested in the United States, has produced a sensation. The populace considered Alfano in the light of a demigod; he was thought to be invulnerable to bullets and able at all times to escape his pursuers.

At one time Alfano was a well-known figure here. When attending to his criminal business he used to drive about in his own carriage, and was always fashionably dressed. He had a rival for the leadership of the Camorra in a man named Cuocolo, and to get him out of the way Alfano informed the police that his rival was a spy.

The Camorra then condemned both Cuocolo and his wife to death, and they were brutally murdered. Alfano remained in Naples for some time after this murder trying to cover up the traces of the crime and deceive the police. In thie he was not successful, and when he finally realized he was in danger fled to the United States. The authorities are endeavoring to obtain the extradition of Alfano with the least loss of time.

GIFT FROM THE BLACK HAND.

Italian Banker Gets Box Filled with Explosives.

Salvatore Gemovese, a banker of 416 Eest Eleventh Street, received a euspicious looking box by express yesterday morning, and having recently received a number of threatening Blaok Hand isttere he reported the matter at Police Headquarters.

Detective Degulda of Detective Sergeant Petrosino's staff took the box to the Bureau of Combustibles, where it was opened by Inspector Wolf. The box, which was 8 inches wide, 10 inches high, and 19 inches long, was found to contain, packed in with a lot of old newspapere, eight 32-calibre cartridges, one electric blasing coil, a lot of lead wire, an 8 by 10 sparking coil, several fulminating caps, and a coil of insulating wire. Inspector Wolf said that the contents of the box formed the making of an infernal machine that would have created havoc had the parts been connected, but as they were they were practically harmless.

Mr. Gemovese told the police that several weeks ago he began receiving Black Hand letters, the first one dsmanding that he pay $1,000. Then the demand was raised to $2,000. Last Wednesday he received a letter which told him that if he did not send the $2,000 by a trusty messenger he would be killed and the banker believes that the box he got yeeterday was meant as a warning of what he might expect if he did not send the money.

IDEAS OF MAX STIRNER.

First English Translation of His Book, "The Ego and His Own"—His Attack on Socialism—The Most Revolutionary Book Ever Published.*

Author of "Iconoclasts."

I.

IN 1888 John Henry Mackay, the Scottish-German poet, an intransigent, while at the British Museum reading Lange's "History of Materialism," encountered the name of Max Stirner and a brief criticism of his forgotten book, "Der Einzige und sein Eigenthum." ["The Only One and His Property"; in French translated "L'Unique et sa Propriété," and in the first English translation more aptly and euphoniously entitled "The Ego and His Own."] His curiosity excited, Mackay, who is a man of assured talents, wealth, and an ardent scholar, procured after some difficulty a copy of the work, and so greatly was he stirred that for ten years he gave himself up to the study of Stirner and his teachings, and after incredible painstaking published in 1898 the story of his life. ["Max Stirner: Sein Leben und sein Werk," John Henry Mackay, Schuster & Loeffler, Berlin und Leipsic.] To Mackay's labors we owe all we know of a man who was as absolutely swallowed up by the years as if he had never existed. But some advanced spirits had read Stirner's book, the most revolutionary ever written, and had felt its influence. Let us name two: Henrik Ibsen and Frederick Nietzsche. Though the name of Stirner is not quoted by Nietzsche, he nevertheless recommended Stirner to a favorite pupil of his, Prof. Baumgartner at Basle University. This was in 1874.

One hot August afternoon in the year 1896 at Bayreuth I was standing in the marktplatz when a member of the Wagner Theatre—the performances were in progress that Summer—pointed out to me a house opposite, at the corner of the Maximilianstrasse, and said: "Do you see that house with the double gables? A man was born there whose name will be green when Jean Paul and Richard Wagner are forgotten." It was too large a draught upon my credulity, so I asked the name. "Max Stirner," he replied. "The crazy Hegelian," I retorted. "You have read him, then?" "No; but you haven't read Nordau." It was true. All fire and flame at that time for Nietzsche, I did not realize that the poet and rhapsodist had forerunners. My friend sniffed at Nietzsche's name; Nietzsche for him was an aristocrat, not an Individualist. In reality, a lyric expounder of Bismarck's gospel of blood and iron. Wagner's adversary would, with Renan, place mankind under the yoke of a more exacting tyranny than Socialism, the tyranny of culture, of the Over-Man. Ibsen, who had studied both Kierkegaard and Stirner—witness Brand and Peer Gynt—Ibsen was much nearer to the champion of the Ego than Nietzsche. Yet it is the dithyrambic author of "Zarathustra" who is responsible, with Mackay, for the recrudescence of Stirner's teachings.

Stirner, Nietzsche and the Doctrine of Individualism.

Nietzsche is the poet of the doctrine, Stirner its prophet, or, if you will, its philosopher. Later I secured the book, which had been reprinted in the cheap edition of Reclam. [1882.] It seemed colorless, or rather gray, set against the glory and gorgeous rhetoric of Nietzsche. I could not see what I saw a decade later—that Nietzsche only used Stirner as a springboard, as a point of departure, and that the Individual had vastly different meanings to these widely disparate temperaments. Stirner, indifferent psychologist as he was, displayed nevertheless the courage of an explorer in search of the pole of the Ego.

The man, whose theories make a tabula rasa of civilization, was born at Bayreuth Oct. 25, 1806, and died at Berlin June 25, 1856. His right name was Johann Caspar Schmidt, Max Stirner being a nickname bestowed upon him by his lively comrades in Berlin because of his very high and massive forehead. His father was a maker of wind instruments, who died six months after his son's birth. His mother remarried, and his stepfather proved a kind protector. Nothing of external importance occurred in the life of Max Stirner that might place him apart from his fellow-students. He was very industrious over his books at Bayreuth, and when he became a student at the Berlin University he attended the lectures regularly, preparing himself for a teacher's profession. He mastered the classics, modern philosophy, and modern languages. But he did not win a doctor's degree; just before examinations his mother became ill with a mental malady, (a fact his critics have noted,) and the son dutifully gave up everything so as to be near her. After her death he married a girl who died within a short time. Later, in 1843, his second wife was Maria Dähnhardt, a very "advanced" young woman, who came from Schwerin to Berlin to lead a "free" life. She met Stirner in the Hippel circle, at a Weinstube in the Friedrichstrasse, where radical young thinkers gathered; Bruno, Bauer, Feuerbach, Karl Marx, Moses Hess, Jordan, Julius Faucher, and other stormy insurgents. She had, it is said, about 10,000 thalers. She was married with the ring wrenched from a witness's purse—her bridegroom had forgotten to provide one. He was not a practical man; if he had been he would not have written "The Ego and His Own."

It was finished between the years 1843 and 1845; the latter date it was published. It created a stir, though the censor did not seriously interfere with it; its attacks on the prevailing government were veiled. In Germany rebellion on the psychic plane expresses itself in metaphysics; in Poland and Russia music is the favorite medium. Feuerbach, Hess, and Szeliga answered Stirner's terrible arraignment of society, but men's thoughts were interested elsewhere, and with the revolt of 1848 Stirner was quite effaced. He had taught for five years in a fashionable school for young ladies; he had written for several periodicals, and translated extracts from the works of Say and Adam Smith.

After his book appeared, his relations with his wife became uneasy. Late in 1846 or early in 1847 she left him and went to London, where she supported herself by writing; later she inherited a small sum from a sister, visited Australia, married a laborer there, and became a washerwoman. In 1897 Mackay wrote to her in London, asking her for some facts in the life of her husband. She replied tartly that she was not willing to revive her past; that her husband had been too much of an egotist to keep friends, and was a man, "Very sly." This was all he could extort from the woman, who evidently had never understood her husband and execrated his memory, probably because her little fortune was swallowed up by their mutual improvidence. Another appeal only elicited the answer that "Mary Smith is preparing for death"—she had become a Roman Catholic. It is the irony of things in general that his book is dedicated to "My Sweetheart, Marie Dähnhardt."

Stirner, after being deserted, led a precarious existence. The old jolly crowd at Hippel's seldom saw him. He was in prison twice for debt—free Prussia!—and often lacked bread. He, the exponent of Egoism, of philosophic anarchy, starved because of his pride. He was in all matters save his theories a moderate man, eating and drinking temperately, living frugally. Unassuming in manners, he could hold his own in debate—and Hippel's appears to have been a rude debating society—yet one who avoided life rather than mastered it. He was of medium height, ruddy, and his eyes deep blue. His hands were white, slender, "aristocratic," writes Mackay. Certainly not the figure of stalwart shatterer of conventions, not the ideal iconoclast; above all, without a touch of the melodrama of communistic anarchy, with its black flags, its propaganda by force, its idolatry of assassinations, bomb throwing, killing of fat, harmless policemen, and its sentimental gab-fests about fraternity. Stirner hated the word Equality; he knew it was a lie, knew that all men are born unequal, as no two grains of sand on earth ever are or ever will be alike. He was a solitary. And thus he died at the age of fifty. A few of his former companions heard of his neglected condition and buried him. Nearly a half century later Mackay, with the co-operation of Hans von Bülow, affixed a commemorative tablet on the house where he last lived, Philipstrasse 19, Berlin, and alone Mackay placed a slab to mark his grave in the Sophienkirchhof.

The Most Thoroughgoing of Nihilists.

It is to the poet of the "Letzte Erkentniss," ("Sum of Knowledge,") with its stirring line, "Dooh bin ich mein," ("But I am Mine,") that I owe the above scanty details of the most thoroughgoing Nihilist who ever penned his disbelief in religion, humanity, society, the family. He rejects them all. We have no portrait of this insurrectionist—he preferred personal insurrection to general revolution; the latter, he asserted, brought in its train either Socialism or a tyrant—except a sketch hastily made by Friedrich Engels, the revolutionist, for Mackay. It is not reassuring. Stirner looks like an old-fashioned German and timid pedagogue, high-coat collar, spectacles, clean-shaven face and all. This valiant enemy of the State, of Socialism, was, perhaps, only brave on paper. But his icy, relentless, epigrammatic style is in the end more gripping than the spectacular, volcanic, whirling utterances of Nietzsche. Nietzsche lives in an ivory tower and is an aristocrat. Into Stirner's land all are welcome. That is, if men have the will to rebel. Above all, if they despise the sentimentality of mob rule. "The Ego and His Own" is the most drastic criticism of Socialism thus far presented.

II.

THE book called "The Ego and His Own" is divided into two parts: first, The Man; second, I. Its motto should be, "I find no sweeter fat than sticks to my own bones." But Walt Whitman's pronouncement had not been made, and Stirner was forced to fall back on Goethe—Goethe, from whom all that is modern flows. "I place my all on Nothing," ["Ich hab' Mein Sach' auf Nichts gestellt," from the joyous poem "Vanitas! Vanitatum Vanitas!"] is Stirner's keynote to his Egoistic symphony. I, Me, Ich, Ego, je, moi—the list might be lengthened of the personal pronoun in various languages. The hateful I, as Pascal said, caused Zola, a solid egoist himself, to assert that the English were the most egotistic of races because their I in their tongue was but a single letter, while the French employed two, je, and not capitalized unless beginning a sentence! Stirner must have admired the English, as his I was the sole counter in his philosophy. His ego and not the family is the unit of the social life. In antique times, when men were really the young, not the ancient, it was a world of reality. Men enjoyed the material. With Christianity came the rule of the spirit; ideas were become sacred, with the concepts of God, Goodness, Sin, Salvation. After Rousseau and the French Revolution humanity was enthroned, and the State became our oppressor. Our first enemies are our parents, our educators—an idea first enunciated by Stendhal, though also original with Stirner. It follows, then, that the only criterion of life is my Ego. Without my Ego I could not apprehend existence. Altruism is a pretty disguise for egotism. No one is or can be disinterested. He gives up one thing for another because the other seems better, nobler to him. Egotism! The ascetic renounces the pleasures of life because in his eyes renunciation is nobler than enjoyment. Egotism again! "You are to benefit yourself, and you are not to seek your benefit," cries Stirner. Explain the paradox! The one sure thing of life is the Ego. [Descartes] Therefore, "I am not you, but I'll use you if you are agreeable to me." Not to God, not to man, must be given the glory. "I'll keep the glory myself." What is Humanity but an abstraction? I am Humanity. Therefore the State is a monster that devours its children. It must not dictate to me. "The State and I are enemies." The State is a spook. A spook, too, is freedom. What is freedom? Who is free? Free for what? The world belongs to all, but all are I. I alone am individual proprietor.

Stirner's Idea of Property.

Property is conditioned by might. What I have is mine. "Whoever knows how to take, to defend, the thing, is him belongs property." Stirner would have held that property was not only mine but ten points of the law. He repudiates all laws. Repudiates competition, for persons are not the subject of competition, but "things" are; therefore if you are without "things" how can you compete? Persons are free, not "things." The world, therefore, is not "free." Socialism is but a further screwing up of the State machine to limit the individual. Socialism is a new god, a new abstraction to tyrannize over the Ego. And remember that Stirner is not speaking of the metaphysical Ego of Hegel, Fichte, Schilling, but of your I, my I, the political, the social I, the economic I of every man and woman. In a sense Stirner is not a philosopher. He is, rather, an Ethiker. He spun no metaphysical cobwebs. He reared no lofty cloud palaces. He did not bring from Asia its pessimism, as did Schopenhauer; nor deny reality, as did Berkeley. He was a foe to general ideas. His was an implacable realist. Yet while he denies the existence of an Absolute, of a Deity, State, Categorical Imperative, he nevertheless had not shaken himself free from Hegelianism, [he is Extreme Left as a Hegelian,] for he erected his I as an Absolute, though only dealing with it in its relations to society. Now, nature abhors an absolute. Everything is relative. So we shall see presently that with Stirner, too, his I is not so independent as he imagines.

He says "crimes spring from fixed ideas." The Church, State, the Family, Morals, are fixed ideas. "Atheists are pious people." They reject one fiction to cling to many old ones. Liberty for the people is not my liberty. Socrates was a fool in that he conceded to the Athenians the right to condemn him. Proudhon said, "Property is theft." Theft from whom? From society? But society is not the sole proprietor. Pauperism is the valuelessness of Me. The State and pauperism are the same. Communism, Socialism abolish private property and push us back into Collectivism. The individual is enslaved by the machinery of the State or by Socialism. Your ego is not free if you allow your vices or virtues to enslave it. The intellect has too long ruled, says Stirner; it is the will (not Schopenhauer's will to live, or Hertmann's will to power, but the sum of our activity expressed by an act of volition; old-fashioned will, in a word) to exercise itself to the utmost. Nothing compulsory, all voluntary. Do what you will. Fey ce que vouldras, as Rabelais has it in his Abbey of Thelème. Not "Know thyself," but get the value out of yourself. Make your value felt. The poor are to blame for the rich. Our art to-day is the only art possible, and therefore real at the time. We are at every moment all we can be. There is no such thing as sin. It is an invention to keep imprisoned the will of our Ego. And as mankind is forced to believe theoretically in sin, yet commit it in its daily life, hypocrisy and crime are engendered. If the concept of sin had never been used as a club over the weak minded, there would be no sinners—i. e., wicked people. [Here the Christian Scientists should read.] The individual is himself the world's history. The world is my picture. There is no other Ego but mine. Louis XIV. said, "L'Etat, c'est moi"; I say, "l'Univers, c'est moi." J. S. Mill wrote in his femoue essay on liberty that "Society has now got the better of the individuel."

Ibsen and Individualism.

Rousseau, a madman of genius, is to blame for the "social contract" and the "oquality" nonsense that has poisoned more than one nation's political ideas. The minority is always in the right, declared Ibsen, as opposed to Comte's "Submission is the base of perfection." To have the will to be responsible for one's self, advises Nietzsche. "I am what I am," (Brand.) "To thyself be sufficient," (Peer Gynt.) Both men failed, for their freedom kills. To thy own self be true. God is within you. Best of all is Lord Acton's dictum that "Liberty is not a means to a higher political end. It is of itself the highest political end." To will is to have to will. (Ibsen.) My truth is the truth, (Stirner.) Mortal has made the immortal, says the Rig Veda. Nothing is greater than I. (Bhagavat Gita.) I am that I am, (the Avesta, also Exodus.) Taine wrote. "Neture is in reality a tapestry of which we see the reverse side. This is why we try to turn it." Hierarchy, oligarchy, both forms submerge the Ego. John Stuart Mill demanded: "How can great minds be produced in a country where the test of a great mind is agreeing in the opinions of small minds?" Bakounine in his fragmentary essay on God and the State feared the domination of science quite as much as an autocracy. "Politics is the madness of the many for the gain of the few," Pope asserted. Read Spinoza, "The Citizen and the State." ("Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.") Or enjoy Oscar Wilde's brilliant epigram: "Charity creates a multitude of sins."

Science tells us in this century that our I is really a "we"; a colony of cells, an orchestra of inherited instincts. We have not even free will or at least only in a limited sense. We are an instrument played upon by our heredity and our environment. The cell, then, is the unit, not the ego. Very well, Stirner would exclaim, (if he had lived after Darwin and 1859,) the cell is my cell, not yours! Away with other cells! But such an autonomous gospel is surely a phantasm. Stirner, too, saw a ghost. Stirner, too, in his proud Individualism was an aristocrat. No man may separate himself from the tradition of his race unless to incur the penalty of a sterile isolation. The solitary is usually the abnormal man. Man is gregarious. Man is a political animal. Even Stirner recognises that man is not man without society.

"Letting Go and Holding On."

In practice he would have agreed with Havelock Ellis that "all the art of living lies in the fine mingling of letting go and holding on." The body includes the soul and the soul permeates the body. That gentle mystic Joachim of Flora said: "The true ascetic counts nothing his own, save only his harp." But Stirner, sentimental, henpecked, myopic Berlin professor, was too actively engaged in wholesale criticism—that is, destruction of society, with all its props and standards, its hidden selfishness and heartlessness—to bother with theories of reconstruction. His disciples have remedied the omission. He speaks, though vaguely, of a Union of Egoists, a Verein, where all would rule all, where man, through self-mastery, would be his own master. "In those days there was no King in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Indeed, Stirner's notions as to Property and Money—"it will always be money"—sound suspiciously like those of our captains of industry. Might conquers Right. He has brought to bear the most blazing light rays upon the shifts and evasions of those who decry egoism, who are what he calls "involuntary," not voluntary, egoists. Their motives are shown to the bone. Your Sir Willoughby Patternes are not your real egoists, but are only half-hearted, selfish weaklings. The true egotist is the altruist, says Stirner; yet Liebnitz was right; so was Dr. Pangloss. This is the best of possible worlds. Any other is not conceivable for man, who is said to be at the top of his zoological series. (Though Quinton has made the astonnding statement that the birds follow the mammals.) We are all "spectres of the dust," and to live on an overcrowded planet we must follow the advice of the Boyg: "Go roundabouti" Compromise is the only sane attitude. The world is not, will not be, to the strong of arm or spirit, as Nietzsche believes. The race is to the mediocre. The survival of the fittest is to the weak. Society shields and upholds the feeble. Mediocrity rules, let Carlyle or Darwin enunciate laws as they may. It was the perception of these facts that drove Stirner to formulate his theories in "The Ego and His Own." He was poor, a failure, and despised by his wife. He lived under a dull, brutal régime. The individual was naught, the State all. His book was his great revenge. It was the efflorescence of his Ego. It was his romance, his dream of an ideal world, his Platonic republic. Philosophy is more a matter of man's temperament than some suppose. And philosophic systems often go by opposites. Schopenhauer preached asceticism, but hardly led an ascetic life; Nietzsche commanded us: "Be hard!" when he really meant it for his own tender, bruised soul. His injunctions to be free, to become Immoralists and Overmen, were but the buttressing up of a will diseased, by the needs of a man who suffered his life long from morbid sensibility. James Walker's suggestion that "We will not allow the world to wait for the Overman. We are the Overmen," is a mordant criticism of Nietzscheism. I am Unique. Never again will this aggregation of atoms stand on earth. Therefore I must be free. I will myself free. (It is spiritual liberty that only counts.) But my I must not be of the kind described by the madhouse doctor in "Peer Gynt": "Each one shuts himself up in the barrel of self. In the self-fermentation he dives to the bottom: with the self-bung he seals it hermetically." The increased self-responsibility of life in an Egoist Union would prevent the world from ever entering into such ideal anarchy, (an-arch, without government.) There is too much of renunciation in the absolute freedom of the will—that is its final, if paradoxical, implication—for the man in the street. Our Utopias are secretly based on Chance. Deny Chance in our existence and life will be without salt. Man is not a perfectible animal. He fears the new and therefore clings to his old beliefs. To each his chimera. He has not grown mentally or physically since the Sumerians—or a million years before the Sumerians. Man is not a logical animal. He is governed by his emotions, his affective life. He hugs his illusions. His brains are an accident, possibly from overnutrition, as De Gourmont says. To fancy him capable of existing in a community where all are self-governed is a rare poet's vision. That way the millennium lies. And would the world be happier if it attained this truth?

Qualities of the English Translation.

The English translation of "The Ego and His Own" is admirable; it is that of a philologist and a versatile scholar. Stirner's form is open to criticism. It is vermicular. His thought is never confused, but he sees so many sides of his theme, embroiders it with so many variations, that he repeats himself. He has neither the crystalline brilliance nor poetic glamour of Nietzsche. But he has left behind him a veritable Breviary of Destruction, a striking and dangerous book. It is dangerous in every sense of the word—to Socialism, to politicians, to hypocrisy. But it asserts the dignity of the individual, not his debasement. It fascinates even though it does not convince, and it is a handy weapon in these days when Socialism is tightening its sluggish coils preparatory to swallowing the State. Herbert Spencer, too, foresaw the dangers of Socialism.

"Is it not the chief disgrace in the world not to be a unit; to be reckoned one character; not to yield that peculiar fruit which each man was created to bear, but to be reckoned in the gross, in the hundred of thousands, of the party, of the section to which we belong, and our opinion predicted geographically as the North or the South?"

But Spencer did not write these words, nor did Max Stirner. Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote them. J. H.

A DETECTIVE STORY FAR OUT OF THE COMMON.

THERE is nothing in the unfamiliar name of Robert Fraser, nor in the unimpressive title of his "Three Men and a Maid" (Edward Clode) to give any one a hint that this is another of those "first books" that turn up at pleasant intervals on the reviewer's table and fairly amaze him with their all-around excellence of plot, construction, and style, and their utter lack of any sign that would indicate a novice as their author. There is always the possibility, of course made surer by its frequent past fulfillment—that the first success will never be followed by a greater or even an equal one, but certain it is that the discovery of such good promise of a worth-while addition to story tellers affords a satisfaction quite distinct from and superior to that to be derived from well established sources. There is no knowing at the beginning of what wonders one is assisting, and possibilities are always interesting.

It is in the well-worn field of the detective story that Mr. Fraser makes his first essay and shows his fitness by concocting a series of happenings so involved and mystifying that not only is everybody in the story led awey on a wrong trail, but the reader himself, though apparently the author's confidant and chuckling all the way along over his own perspicacity, is astounded on the seventh page from the last by a denouement of which he has never even dreamed, except as a possibility for "another story." If this rarital trick has ever been played before by the ingenious makers of mysteries it has escaped memory, but its effectiveness is so great that one can appreciate to the full the chagrin of the star detective in the story who finds his brilliance distinctly dimmed at the end by the same humiliating discovery of the one thing he did not know. A charming little touch of the author's, by the way, is this discomfiture of the great Mr. Webster, and it is calculated to soothe the reader's ruffled vanity.

Unpromising enough of excitement would seem the remote Yorkshire village of Hudston, which Mr. Fraser chooses for the scene of his strange drama, did we not know well enough that the darkest of tragedies have over and over again developed in just such deadly quiet surroundings. A Country Squire and his most villainous cousin, a vicar and his nephew, an innkeeper's two handsome daughters, a scoundrelly lawyer or two, and a most excellently drawn detective furnish the personnel of the narrative, the special recommendation of which is that it is not put in the first person, and has not a visible trace of the tiresomely wise deductions and logical puzzle-reading that are the ordinary accompaniments of the detective story. Mr. Webster is built on quite a different plan from his predecessors, but he is much more human and convincing than most of them. The "maid" seems all that her lovers thought her, which is vastly more than can be said of most heroines, and the "three men" are strong characters skilfully portrayed. There is always one personality which stands out beyond the rest in any story, seeming to best respond to the author's efforts and in this case it is the wicked sister, Hannah Nayland, who dominates the scene and is its tragic figure.

The keynote of the tale is the rivalry of the three men for the hand of Marjorie Nayland. She is only the village inn-keeper's daughter, but she has had the advantage of spending much time in London, and is the object of her sister's venomous jealousy. One of the three is found murdered, and as his death is greatly to the benefit of the other two and the piling up of the circumstantial evidence in the affair is both enormous and enormously mystifying, it will be seen whither Mr. Fraser's ingenious fancy wanders, but it would be a thousand pities to spoil a splendid story by telling any more about it than that it is well worth reading.

TIPPOO TIB.

AN odd but interesting biography published by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. is "Tippoo Tib," narrated by Dr. Heinrich Brode, an old resident of Zanzibar. In his preface Dr. Brode says:

> The name of Tippoo Tib is familiar to all who took an interest in the affairs of East Africa or the Congo fifteen or twenty years ago. He was the most remarkable of the band of Arab traders and explorers who, starting from the East Coast, penetrated to the Congo, and were the rulers of whatever country they happened to be in, though they established no States and did not even claim the right of conquest on behalf of their sovereign, the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Becoming personally acquainted with and interested in Tippoo Tib, Dr. Brode induced him to write the story of his life, which he did, in Swahili, using Arabic characters which Dr. Brode transcribed for translation into German. The material thus obtained Dr. Brode expanded so that he has given a picture of Africa before the foreign inroads.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS

IN the nature of things a life of Frederick Douglass, the best-known American negro of the past generation, by Booker Washington, the best-known American negro of the present generation, is not so much a history as a panegyric and a plea. The Principal of Tuskegee is bound to see the black Apostle of Abolition, not as he seems to the ordinary white American, but writ large. For the ordinary white American sees Douglass against the background of the whole body of his contemporaries of all colors and measures him accordingly, while his like-colored fellow-citizen consciously or unconsciously measures him by his pre-eminence in his own race. There, of course, since that race was in his times even more than now a race of field hands, he loomed gigantic.

The truth is that the Maryland slave who elected (out of Scott's "Marmion") to call himself Douglass, able as he was, was rather a weapon in the hands of fate and the Abolitionists than a force in himself. His historic value is chiefly as a symbol. He was caught up by a tendency which owed its motive power not at all to him and pushed forward as Exhibit A of what the enslaved black man might become if he were free. It is no reflection upon the Principal of Tuskegee (whose own eminence owes much to a like fortune he may be called Exhibit B) that he mistakes Douglass for a power in himself.

Thus much by way of adjusting the picture to the larger view, and the present volume, "Frederick Douglass," (American Crisis Biographies, Philadelphia, George W. Jacobs & Co.) may fairly be described as a work of real value as well as of great interest. Douglass (whose real name was Frederick Augustus Washington Bailey) was born of a slave mother and a white father, unknown, on a plantation at Tuckahoe, Md., in 1817, and the story of his childhood and youth spent in bondage makes, ne Principal Washington tells it, a tale at once moving and picturesque, in which the young slave assumes many attributes of the hero and martyr. The material, of course, is furnished by Douglass's own autobiographical writings—the dramatic incidents worked over and touched up, no doubt, for use during the Abolitionist propaganda which followed his escape to Massachusetts in 1838—but the substance of it bearing sufficient internal evidence of as reasonable accordance with the actual facts as may be expected in impassioned or heroic biography. Once Douglass is safe in New Bedford, Mass., in the midst of the Abolition sentiment, and once his value as an object lesson and inspiration begins to be appreciated by the leaders of the movement, the runaway chattel is launched upon a career to which his conspicuous native ability and his handsome gifts as an orator presently lent an individual and personal value.

He served his Abolitionist friends as a symbol, but he made himself felt among them also as something more, became a distinct influence with a will of his own, a leader of free negroes, and a man of power in the politics of his party. His biographer dwells at length upon this career and, as previously hinted, exaggerates its importance in the total. But it is an interesting career, and sufficiently notable. He discusses also the whole question of the issues between the sections, and interprets those issues in terms of the interests of the negro race as he sees them. This is not new ground for Principal Washington, but he goes over it again stoutly, reiterating his points as indefatigably as the eminent person with whom he once so historically lunched. And he states his case well, as usual.

Coming to the relations of Douglass to John Brown claims are made for Douglass as a familiar of Brown and as an accessory to his schemes, which we note are disputed by Mr. F. B. Sanborn in the Springfield Republican on behalf of certain white Abolitionists. It is worth observing in this connection that Principal Washington (who has a right as a negro to look at things differently) appreciates and deprecates the horror of the mad thing Brown planned, while Mr. Sanborn apparently does not, insisting as he does that the excellent New England philanthropists whom he represents shall have all the credit due them for financing the raid. Douglass himself, though he participated in the preliminary counsels, refused to take part in it, and according to Washington advised against it.

Douglass's part in the civil war—his instrumentality in the enlisting of negro troops and the conduct of the Government in sidetracking the commission he expected—provide a chapter which is necessarily an argument for the prosecution (of prejudice), and the same may be said of the further chapters on the office-holding period in Washington which followed the war. One of these chapters also recapitulates Principal Washington's defense of the Freedmen's Bureau and its work (commonly anathema in the mouths of Southerners who enjoyed the dubious benefit of his ministrations) while her remarks of Douglass's second marriage to a white woman (of a family of Abolition propagandists) that "his own race especially condemned him." The dismay of the Abolition propagandists of the wife's race caused by the marriage is not noticed specifically by the present biographer—but it is a matter of history. Douglass died in 1895, after enjoying successively the offices of Recorder of Deeds and Marshal of the District of Columbia and Minister to Haiti. The present volume contains sufficient quotations from his speeches to prove that he was a man above the ordinary (apart from his color), and no mean orator, even if it fails, taken with his deeds, to prove him an epoch-making character. An epoch-made character instead, he was beyond doubt, and for all that a remarkable personage.

MEMOIRS OF FRENCH COURT.

AN important addition to the reminiscences of the French Court, and the most important publication of the season from their press, in the opinion of Charles Scribner's Sons, is a volume of memoirs from an entirely unnotorious person—the Comtesse de Boigne. Largely because the manuscript was written in her old age to her nephew, the Marquis d'Osmond, the last of his line, the memoirs are of a familiar interest and a style of simple and convincing literary quality that have decided the publishers to add the book to the many works of its kind. The Comtesse shows herself to have been a remarkable woman whose friendships make her a valuable chronicler. Her parents both held official positions, and she has given a vivid picture of the court before the Revolution. Incidentally she describes her father's acquaintance with the Bonaparte family in Corsica when Napoleon was a boy, and she gives a great deal from her own experience about Napoleon and the Restoration. Her pages are filled with intimate and amusing personal reminiscences of men and women distinguished in society, politics, and literature—Mme. Recamier, Mme. de Staël, Guizot, Lamartine. For a time she was an emigre, and she formed friendships with Lady Hamilton, Lady Harrington, and Lady Hester Stanhope, of whom she has characteristic things to say. After having witnessed the entry of the Allies into Paris she accompanied her father on his appointment to the embassy at Turin. Here the present volume ends. Others are expected to follow. The present one has lately been published in France. The manuscript of it was withheld from publication as long as its references were to living people. The book will be published in May.

BLAKE'S EDITORS.

A NEW work by Edwin J. Ellis continues the revival of interest in William Blake, the poet and painter, who is called, with equal reason, a genius and a lunatic because of the uncertain flights of his irresponsible art. Mr. Ellis will be remembered as the co-editor with W. B. Yeats of the first full edition of the poetical works of Blake, which appeared from the press of Chatto & Windus, London. Under the title "The Real Blake" he has here presented a lengthy and elaborate treatise purported to establish his interpretation of the poet. Worthy or unworthy as the work may prove, it is vanguarded by a rampant impugnment of other editors of Blake. Mr. F. Tatham and Mr. G. B. Russell, editors of Blake's Letters, including his Life, are treated in a vexatious spirit largely because of alleged shortcomings. But upon Mr. John Sampson, who edited the shorter poems of Blake, Mr. Ellis draws the knife uncompromisingly. Mr. Sampson has, says Mr. Ellis, "produced a work which is a monumental record of every error that the hasty pen of Blake himself or any of his previous editors had ever committed. This work shows every ailment from which every text of Blake has suffered, and its long pages of notes are like the wards of a hospital." This was called forth by a criticism by Mr. Sampson of "some few slight errors" in Mr. Ellis's full edition. Mr. Ellis proceeds upon many big and small points of difference. The book will be issued by Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. May 8.

THE CAREER OF EDWIN L. GODKIN

MR. EDWIN L. GODKIN was a born journalist. No one can trace his career in the two volumes devoted to his life and letters, edited by Mr. Rollo Ogden, his successor as editor of The Evening Post, without being impressed by that fact. One proof of many, and convincing in itself, is that he drifted into journalism despite a definite determination to follow another profession. He had made for himself a considerable reputation as a correspondent of The Daily News in the Crimean war, and as the sub-editor of a Belfast paper, when, at the age of 25, he declined a favorable offer to become its editor in order to cross the sea and "practice at the American bar." He studied law here in the office of David Dudley Field, was admitted, and practiced a little, but only a little. He could not resist the call that appealed to his strongest instincts and aroused his most active faculties. He very promptly, besides writing letters to The London News, became an editorial writer on THE NEW YORK TIMES, then the editor of The Nation, then, after sixteen years, an editor of The Evening Post with Mr. Carl Schurz as chief, and finally, in 1883, the editor-in-chief of that paper, where he remained until 1899, three years before his death. During this long period of active work in journalism Mr. Godkin made repeated attempts to change his occupation. At one time he applied for the chair of political economy and jurisprudence in the then new Cornell University, and at another seriously weighed an invitation to assume a chair at Harvard; so late as his accession to The Post he declared that he intended to retire after ten years, but though he found his task often irksome and sometimes distasteful, his hand seemed unable to drop the pen to which it was fitted as a swordsman's to his weapon.

Mr. Ogden has done the work of editing with great modesty and with good judgment. For the most part he allows the letters of Mr. Godkin and of his correspondents to tell so much of the story of Mr. Godkin as it is desired to tell. Some incidents do not receive the attention which their interest at the time of their occurrence would suggest; some personal phases are treated with more fullness than would have been expected by those acquainted with Mr. Godkin's extreme reticence; and habitual readers of The Nation might desire that the essential character and extent of his peculiar work should be more fully brought out. But within the space allowed—and, with reference to the general reading of the volumes, it is clearly sufficient—any selection decided on by the editor would seem to some not the best. Any plausible objections to that of Mr. Ogden are but rare.

The debt due to Mr. Godkin from his adopted country was substantial and of an unusual kind, such as few others, if any, could have imposed. The service for which it was incurred began early. He came to the United States in 1856, as above noted, at the age of 25. He was born in Ireland among the Wicklow hills. His father, a Presbyterian clergyman, traced his ancestry back to an Anglo-Saxon colony in the twelfth century; his mother was of a family of Cromwellian settlers, so that there was plenty of fighting blood in the race. Young Godkin was graduated from Queen's College, Belfast, at 19, went to London to study law at Lincoln's Inn, attracted the attention of Knight Hunt of The Daily News, was sent to the Crimea for a couple of years, and then came to the United States. "John Stuart Mill was our prophet," he wrote of his college days, "but America was our promised land." Before entering on the study of American law he made a journey of seven months on horseback through the lower Southern States, following nearly in the steps of Mr. Olmsted, whose remarkable letters had been secured by THE NEW YORK TIMES. Mr. Godkin's journey, made primarily for a business house in England interested in the cotton situation, resulted in a valuable series of letters to The London News, which had a powerful influence in setting before liberal England the actual condition and temper of the South a few years before the civil war. They compared favorably with those of his friend Olmsted in acuteness of observation and penetration of judgment. They were the beginning of the service to which reference has been made.

In 1860, on the eve of the Presidential election, he was obliged by impaired health to return to Europe, and remained there until the Fall of 1862. During this sojourn he was incessantly active in setting before the British public the real issues of the conflict raging in what he then regarded as his own country, where he had found his wife, and where his eldest son was born. During the anxious weeks following the seizure of Slidell and Mason on board the Trent, he maintained the stoutest defense of the American action, going beyond our own Government in its justification, and arraigning the British Government almost savagely for its inconsistency and its bullying. With the battle of Antietam the adverse tide in the affairs of the Union may be said to have begun to turn. Mr. Godkin's letters to The News continued into the seventies, and were at all times of value. In the light of the subsequent reputation he acquired as a critic of our public life it is worth noting that they were of especial value in their refutation of the misrepresentations of the country in the British press. A native writer could not have been more friendly, and no native writer could have carried the same weight.

In 1865 The Nation was started. How Mr. Godkin was then regarded in his profession may be seen from a letter addressed to him by Mr. Henry J. Raymond.

I cannot permit your connection with THE TIMES to cease without saying how deeply I regret your loss and how cordially I wish you success in your new enterprise. Your pen has been of the utmost value to THE TIMES for a good many years past, and it will be missed by thousands who had come to distinguish it among all those employed upon its columns.

***

The Nation was really a success from the beginning, though it had the vicissitudes not unusual when capital is subscribed by a number of very earnest gentlemen with pronounced views. It established a standard both as to ability and dignity not common at that day; it was managed with energy, enterprise, and fidelity; and, not a negligible element, it paid about twice the customary rate for contributions, and the command of contributors thus secured was exercised with much firmness and discrimination. Mr. Wendell Phillips Garrison, who had charge of the literary side of the weekly, had rare gifts for that work, and was in perfect sympathy with Mr. Godkin. The list of writers announced in the prospectus was a remarkable one, including quite the best among littérateurs, college professors, publicists, and essayists. "Our leading political aim," wrote Mr. Godkin to his intimate friend Olmsted, "is to secure political equality before the law in all parts of the Union; all others are open questions, but I seek to have everything discussed more temperately and accurately than is usual. 'Social articles,' however, are my great need." After a little, he got these also. J. R. Dennet came on the office staff, and W. D. Howells later, and W. C. Brownell; the paper had a charm, as had Godkin himself a very strong charm, for that sort of men, and he knew, with Garrison's aid, how to use them. When The Nation in 1881 was sold to The Evening Post the tributes to it from persons of the highest standing here and abroad were most striking, and they were well deserved. The man who won these tributes, and, perhaps, even more the gentlemen associated with him, were not blind to the merits of the paper. It had a certain loftiness of tone not always to be borne patiently. "The Weekly Judgment Day" was an epithet applied to it without malice by one of its friends, and one of the brightest of American poets confessed to writing "a hymnkin to my Godkin." But these gibes were due to the defects of its qualities, and the latter were of unquestionable value.

When Mr. Godkin became the responsible and controlling mind in The Evening Post he lost something of his individuality of influence, perhaps, and was forced to do his work under conditions to which he never quite accustomed himself, but he gave to the paper a power and distinction of a marked kind. Independence, consistency, thoroughness of information, and disregard of temporary advantages in politics, these were the traits peculiarly due to him. On the other hand, the weaknesses of temper and the tendency to intellectual haughtiness, which were softened by the deliberateness of weekly writing, became more noticeable in daily work, and apparently somewhat grew upon him. It may be said, but it must be said with entire respect, that confidence in the soundness of his own conclusions gradually was exceeded by confidence in the utter unsoundness of those that differed from his, and with this came a certain readiness to suspect the motives that could lead to such difference. And these idiosyncrasies are the more noteworthy in his newspaper work because they were by no means conspicuous, were, on the contrary, unusually rare in personal intercourse. There is ample evidence in these volumes of the varied charm Mr. Godkin exerted in such intercourse, evidence contributed freely by many of the best men of our own land and of England. His visits to the latter country toward the close of his life brought him into familiar and delightful relations with a multitude of such men, and the partial record of his impressions on these occasions is a happy feature of these volumes.

Mr. Godkin, to his great credit be it said, did not confine his efforts toward the promotion of good government to discussion in the press, important as was this part of his work. In the establishment of the merit system in the administrative branch of the Government, in the advance of what is generally known as civil service reform, he took a practical and substantial part. The cause was the object of much ridicule in its earlier stages, and it was no small part of Mr. Godkin's service to it that, with thorough information both as to the present and the past, he not only confuted misrepresentation but visited upon its authors a merciless sarcasm, of which they soon learned to have a wholesome dread. In the patient and wearying labors of the Civil Service Reform Organization, particularly the New York association, he took his full share of work, and of very efficient work. He was, for instance, a member of the committee which, under the law of 1883, assisted in framing the rules by which the police and fire services have ever since, with but little modification, been administered. In politics he never joined any party, maintaining with entire fidelity the independence he insisted on in his papers, though he had a keen appreciation of the necessity of parties and of the work that could be done through them only. PORT-ROYAL.

THE famous nunnery, Port-Royal des Champs, founded in 1204 at Chevreuse, near Versailles, has been chronicled by Ethel Romanes, author of the life of George John Romanes. The book, "The Story of Port-Royal," is published by E. P. Dutton & Co. The institution has been the subject of interest and discussion for centuries, and has been treated in lengthy histories by Fontaine, Racine, and Sainte-Beuve. Many men and women of note were connected with it from time to time, and its Jansenistic movement in the seventeenth century against the Jesuits carried the weight of strong forces. A branch Port-Royal was founded in the historic Hotel de Clugny, but that was later taken over by the Jesuits. The nuns of Port-Royal des Champs were dispersed in 1709 and their abbey was leveled to the ground.

JAMESTOWN.

Old and New Books Relating to Its Settlement and Articles in Periodicals.

THE little town that was the cradle of the Nation has been, naturally, the subject of so many writings that an exhaustive and elaborate bibliography would be necessary to include all noteworthy references to Jamestown. The great libraries have many old manuscripts and quaint records and "relations" by explorers and recorders of the day, historical societies have such records in originals and purchasable reprints, and general references can, of course, be found in all standard United States histories. A few of the old and a few new books are particularly to be recommended to those prospective visitors to the coming exposition who are seriously enough interested in their pleasure to want to refresh their memories on the history of the place, with its romance and its rich stories of adventures. For the exposition, with all the glory of modern achievement, cannot rival the enthralling interest of the vanished hamlet it commemorates.

For those who are looking for a single work that will survey in brief space the entire history of Jamestown, the most terse account is the chapter on Virginia in the Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge's one volume, "Short History of the English Colonies in America." (Harpers, $3.) A general history of greater length is John Fiske's "Old Virginia and Her Neighbors," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 2 volumes.) No better books of their kind could be mentioned than these two of authoritative authorship and literary charm. They are highly readable and thorough histories of broad interpretation. An expensive reference work that will be found of value to those who can reach it for detailed geographical, biographical, and historical reference is "Harper's Encyclopaedia of United States History." (10 volumes.)

A work that must be put in a class by itself is the fascinating first-hand account "The Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles," by Capt. John Smith, to be had in the recently published and first collected works of the doughty Captain, ("John Smith's Travels," Macmillan; two volumes, 8vo, $6 net—including also "The True Travels, Adventures, and Observations of Capt. John Smith" and "A Sea Grammar.") These books are neither terse nor short, but they are rich in color and intimate interest and most entertaining and valuable reading. The man commonly thought of to-day as the bluff adventurer and the working partner of the grantees of the settlement shows himself to be, if not an imaginative litterateur, at least a master of phrase according to the quaint manner of the day. "The Generall Historie" covers six books, four, included in the first volume, being on Virginia, the expedition to Jamestown, its settling and succeeding events, with descriptions of its lands and waters and an account of the internal dissensions of the colony, its troubles with the Indians, and many small incidents and personal experiences. Reports of other men are employed, but for the most part the story is of what came under Smith's own observation.

The personal stories of John Smith and of Pocahontas, which so color the history of "James Towne," and which are of more than common adventure and romance because the two stand for the preservation of the first settlement of English-speaking America, are treated biographically by a dozen or more writers, including Jared Sparks, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Charles Dudley Warner, and Edward Eggleston, (mentioned in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, Jan. 5, 1907.)

Other books to be mentioned here are "Jamestown," by E. H. Hall, (New York: American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society;) papers by Lyon Gardiner Tyler, (Whittet & Shepperson, Richmond, and Harpers, New York,) and "The Site of Old James Towne," by Samuel H. Yonge, (Richmond: Association for Preservation of Virginia Antiquities.) A noteworthy book published this month is Mrs. Roger A. Pryor's "The Birth of the Nation." (Macmillan.) In which she has put much information into a readable account of Jamestown.

Two books for juvenile readers there are fortunately, which give the young folk reading as worthy as any their parents may have. One is the entrancing volume, published years ago, "Old Times in the Colonies," by the excellent writer, Charles Carleton Coffin, (Harpers, $2.) only certain chapters being on Jamestown; the other is "The Story of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith," by E. Boyd Smith, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $2.50.) Mr. Smith, who won distinction two years ago through his book called "Noah's Ark," has given, with the same genius for pictured story books, a brief and nicely written text, and many full-page illustrations of the decorative quality of Boutet de Monvel.

The current periodicals will contribute some important articles on the history of the exposition's grounds. Thomas Nelson Page has written for the April 27 issue of Collier's Weekly "Jamestown and What Happened There." Another article by him will appear in the May number of The Century, under the title "Jamestown, the Cradle of American Civilization." Scribner's Magazine for May will commence a series of articles by Sidney Lee, the English writer, on "America and Elizabethan England," dealing, in part, with the conditions which led to the English settlement of Virginia.

Finally, it is interesting to note that the New York Public Library has made, in reference to the time, a complete and elaborate list of all material possessed by the library relating to the history of Virginia—which proves to be a valuable and exhaustive collection. This bibliography is to be found in the February and March (1907) numbers of the library's Bulletin.

LETTERS TO A DAUGHTER.

IRRESPECTIVE of the fact that everybody is more or less weary of the diluted sort of fiction that has so often been served up in the guise of letters illustrative of all possible forms of relationship and friendship, the "Letters to a Daughter" contributed to the series by Mr. Hubert Bland, (Mitchell Kennerley,) are unsatisfactory from various intrinsic reasons. Chief of these is the suspicion amounting to certainty that no real father ever wrote anything like them to any real daughter, and that if he did he was not the possessor of the best of taste or the wisest of judgment. Then one insensibly harks back, while reading them, to the delectable epistles in which another father, of quite a different type, bequeathed to his son the accumulated wisdom and philosophy of a lifetime spent in the thick of the fight, and, comparing the pleasure and profit derived from the two parental disclosures, one is led to the conclusion that sons are vastly more inspiring subjects of fatherly admonition than daughters, and that the concerns of young ladyhood do present a decidedly frivolous air when used as texts for serious discussion.

Alexa and her father assume a somewhat superior pose in their one-sided conversation, but there is nothing strikingly new to be offered on such topics as tactfulness, good manners, fashion and dress, the undesirableness of flirting and worshipping at the shrines of matinée idols or of sitting in judgment upon one's neighbors, and Mr. Bland contents himself with the expression of extremely familiar views on all of these points. In the several chapters devoted to matters of the heart, however, Alexa's father shows a decided tendency to individuality and modernity, and proceeds with more frankness than good taste to strip most of the romances from life for her benefit and all possibility of glamour from any young man upon whom she may have been looking with favorable eyes. It isn't at all surprising to find all the parental eye-openers working havoc with her belief in one who did at first seem to be of "the right sort," and causing her to go through with the horrors of a broken betrothal because he did not have "that subtle something" which is only noticed when it is absent. Nor do we wonder that her father had "a curious feeling that it was he and not Alexa" who had done the jilting. One thing Alexa's father did not have, and that was keen sense of humor, a thing hardly to be forgiven in a letter-writer.

THE JENA CAMPAIGN.

THE John Lane Company are publishing "Napoleon's Conquest of Prussia," by F. Loraine Petre, with maps and plans, and an introduction by Field Marshal Earl Roberts. This is an exhaustive first-hand account from a military point of view, and the result of careful study of the subject. The campaign of Jena, generally supposed to be so well known, has not, in fact, been reviewed before in the light of full detailed knowledge of it. We quote from Earl Roberts's introduction:

> One cannot read the story of the Jena Campaign, as told by Mr. Petre, without realizing from the tragedy of Prussia in 1806, as depicted therein, a tragedy without a parallel in modern times—the fate, amazing in its swiftness and appalling in its severity, which may at any moment overtake a state which exists in fancied security, based on traditions of a heroic past, and wrapped in a selfish indifference, hoping, ostrich-like, to escape the danger it refuses to see. . . .
> "I earnestly recommend this volume to all classes of British subjects, and more particularly to statesmen, on whose shoulders rests the responsibility of power. Mr. Petre has done his work well. He has consulted the best authorities for his facts, and he has visited and explored the theatre of war and the battlefields which he so graphically describes. His book, which is lucid in style and admirable in arrangement, gives a more complete and concise account of this epoch-making struggle than has yet appeared in the English language. Its value is greatly enhanced by the admirable maps and plans which accompany and illumine the text."

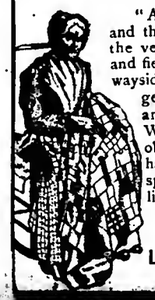
Aunt Jane of Kentucky

By ELIZA CALVERT HALL



"Aunt Jane is not false, nor cheap, nor shallow, and the stories that are put in her mouth exhale the very breath of old gardens and country roads and fields, and plain old churches in groves by the wayside—reflect the very faces, figures, voices, gestures, sentiment of two generations ago among the plain and solid folks of Kentucky. Where so many have made caricatures of old-time country folk, Eliza Calvert Hall has caught at once the real charm, the real spirit, the real people, and the real joy of living which was theirs."—New York Times.

STUDIES OF THE SEVEN ARTS.

Arthur Symons's New Volume of Essays—Poetry, Music, Painting, the Plastic Arts and the Art of Acting.

CRITICS may be divided into two kinds: those who express the thoughts of the world directing few, and those who disentangle the meditations of the multitude. The former are the few great critics, whose mission it is to explain what their fellow-workers themselves cannot usually explain by reason of being too hard at work. The latter are the lesser critics, who have their needed place, and fulfill their necessary mission of saying what the people think but cannot say because most of them have neither talent nor time. Of these latter Mr. Arthur Symons is assuredly one of the foremost, if not quite the first, English representative. He has made several good studies in the art of elucidation, (notably an "Introduction to the Study of Browning,") and this book of "Studies in Seven Arts" (Dutton) may possibly be considered generally the best. Of the seven arts here considered, poetry, so far as that is the art of pure language, is not one; for

That is my main concern in most of my other books of criticism. In this book I have tried to deal with the other arts, as I know or recognize them; and I find seven: painting, sculpture, architecture, music, handicraft, the stage, (in which I include drama, acting, pantomime, scenery, costume, and lighting,) and, separate from these, dancing.

This seems a fair division of the arts. Moreover, along with this division and at the head of the book is set forth that dictum of Walter Pater in which the great critic says:

It is the mistake of much popular criticism to regard poetry, music, and painting—all the various products of art—as but translations into different languages of one and the same fixed quantity of imaginative thought, supplemented by certain technical qualities of color in painting, of sound in music, of rhythmical words in poetry. In this way the sensuous element in art, and with it almost everything in art that is essentially artistic, is made a matter of indifference; and a clear apprehension of the opposite principle—that the sensuous material of each art brings with it a special phase or quality of beauty, untranslatable into the forms of any other, an order of impressions distinct in kind—is the beginning of all the aesthetic criticism?

Observing this, Mr. Symons preserves order throughout his book and reproduces for the reader much of his own original aesthetic enjoyment. He nowhere shapes any such commanding thought as that of Pater's just quoted; but simply disentangles deep sense from superficial opinion in the general mind of the well educated. Then and there he leaves them better prepared to receive whatever master-thought shall come next and lead them further.

The plastic arts are here discoursed of first. Sculpture is seen through Rodin. Painting through Gustave Moreau, Watts, and Whistler, and in a criticism of D. S. MacColl's "Nineteenth Century Art." Architecture is treated of in a chapter on cathedrals. Handicraft is expounded by contrasts with the deplorable productions of recent English crafts men and women. The stage is dealt with in the last five chapters, and of these only one, given to Eleanora Duse, is at all adequate. Three massive chapters on music in the middle of this book so far surpass the rest of it in power and in critical quality, and have besides such unity of design, that one might well wish they had been left to be a whole book by themselves.

But first of the plastic artists; among his painters Watts is enthusiastically praised; Whistler much more warm-heartedly admired; Moreau justly put into his proper place. Of sculptors Rodin is shown supreme in the nineteenth century by one paragraph which will stand for all the rest:

Here is the Balzac with its royal air shouldering the crowd apart, as it steps into the final solitude, and the triumph. It is the thinker of action, the visionary creator of worlds, standing there like a mountain that has become man. The pose is that of a rock against which all waves must dash themselves in vain. There is exultation, a kind of ferocity of enjoyment of life and of the making of life, in the great beaked head, the great jaws, the eagle's eyes under the crag of eyebrows. And the rock which suggests the man, the worker wrapped in the monastic habit of his dressing gown, all supple force under the loose folds of molded clay, stands there as if growing up out of the earth, planted for the rest of time. It is the proudest thing that has been made out of clay.

For Whistler Mr. Symons has a quieter enthusiasm than such as needs rhetoric. Whistler was the artist par excellence in this interpretation, for he possessed a perfect and intuitive recognition of limitations. That is to say, whatever he did was made to avail itself to the utmost of the fact that "the sensuous material of each art brings with it a special phase or quality of beauty." This was revealed in tiniest details.

The monogram which he designed for a friend who was a publisher is the simplest and the most decorative monogram that I can remember. He drew the lettering for the books of another friend, and this lettering, which seems the most obvious thing in the world, makes the lettering on every other modern book look clumsy and far-fetched.

Whistler, besides being a great painter, was a many-sided man, with a great talent for conversation. Indeed, conversation with him became an art—not an art of skipping paradoxes—but an art of telling exact truth in words. And the words were truthful because he gave them the same power as he gave to paint. The portrait of a gentleman whose character and appearance could not be adequately rendered except in a picture of a many-tentacled devil at a piano is "Whistler's one joke in paint," and may serve to present one particular quality of his conversation.

In work of a higher order the portrait of Sarasate by Whistler is contrasted with that of Joachim by Watts:

Joachim is in the act of playing; he bends his brows over the music which he is studying, not reading; if there is any platform or any audience, he is unconscious of them—he is conscious only of Beethoven. Note how Sarasate dandles the violin. It is a child, a jewel. He is already thinking of the sound, the flawless tone, not of Beethoven. Whistler has caught him, poised him, posed him, another butterfly, and alive. Imagine Sarasate painted by Watts, or indeed in any way but Whistler's! There might have been other great pictures, but no other such interpretation.

Throughout this book Mr. Symons recognizes and is, indeed, himself filled with the modern artistic impulse to strain beyond the bounds of art. Not, that is to say, to discount the inevitable limitations of each kind of art, but within those limitations to create life, is the desire of those who have set themselves to pursue their way without stopping anywhere to love rather than to appreciate the things of that life which, if they could create, they would only spoil. In despair of achieving this ultimate alchemy Mr. Symons and the rest take forced refuge in suggestion. They see, or think they see, the futility of imitation, even as Plato saw it in the Republic. For instance, in a theatre they have, some of them, come to revolt against the realism of the painted scenery, and there would prefer vague curtains and misty movements of dancers to suggest, to create in the imagination of the spectator what cannot be actually created at all. Thus Mr. Symons would here commend a certain Mr. Craig, who indulges in this kind of thing to the utter exclusion of popular common sense. Yet Mr. Symons has in this same book written a wonderfully sound appreciation of Richard Wagner. And Richard Wagner, above all things, appeals to common sense in the people. After the first failure of Tannhäuser he writes: "I saw myself forced to take the people into my confidence." Indeed, no one else has ever opened such a magnificent opportunity for display of scenic engineering ability of the most popular kind as Wagner has provided, especially in the Ring.

The fact is that to the healthy human mind in which there lives always the faculty (which supremely belongs to children) of being easily pleased—the play's the thing, and must please, provided it be good; and if only it appeal to the depths of the healthy mind. Realism of painted scenery will never be rebelled against when it sets off the true and noble realism of the eternal purposes which for us are of the past, the present, and the future. These grow old only when the effort to appreciate them is made from the depths of an unhealthy mind. The mind of Mr. Symons as revealed in this book is assuredly very healthy in itself. But when in the fulfillment of itself in its critical office it is temporarily dominated by an unhealthy influence Mr. Symons appears at a disadvantage. When, on the contrary, Richard Wagner or Ludwig von Beethoven take hold of him he becomes fine; or when he is made by his love for those masters to rebel against undoubted faults in Richard Strauss.

But even in the contemplation of Beethoven Mr. Symons evinces a deplorable desire for suggestion at the expense of sense. He says that the final chorus of the Ninth Symphony might be just as well supported with unmeaning syllables as with Schiller's words. That is a critical lie.

PERCY VINCENT DONOVAN.

The Mecklenburg Declaration.

William Henry Hoyt has written an interesting revised chapter to history, described by its title "The Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence: A Study of Evidence Showing that the Alleged Early Declaration of Independence by Mecklenburg County, N. C., on the 20th of May, 1775, is Spurious." There have been few problems of American history so productive of discussion and so seemingly far from convincing solution as the authenticity of this remarkable North Carolina document, which bears such a marked resemblance to the great declaration that followed it the year after. Mr. Hoyt's book is an exhaustive study of original sources. Its purpose is to prove that during the Revolutionary War a series of resolves passed in Mecklenburg County May 31, 1775, were transfigured by the imperfect understanding and recollection of many persons into a declaration of independence, and that the several versions of the paper purporting to have been adopted May 20, 1775, trace their origin to rough notes written in 1800 by one who attempted to reprodnce from memory the substance of these resolves.

ABOUT THE STARS.

THE FRIENDLY STARS. By Martha Evans Martin. With an introduction by Harold Jacoby. Illustrated. Pp. ix.-260. 12mo. Cloth. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

IT is fairly presumable that there are thousands of intelligent people who would greatly like to have some definite, comfortable knowledge of the stars; these people find themselves hopelessly bewildered by the simplest astronomical treatises, and quickly give up their attempt in utter despair. For the benefit of such readers this admirable little book has been prepared. The writer, although she "minds high things," graciously "condescends to men of low estate," and she succeeds in doing so without giving that impression of coming a long way downstairs, always so distressing to one's self-respect. This is a book to rank with Mrs. Dana's "How to Know the Wild Flowers," which for the past fourteen years has been a source of so much pleasure to readers quite ignorant of botany; and it is a significant fact that these books which teach us how to enjoy more fully the fairest things on the earth and in the sky should come to us from the hands of women. The book has for its motto a very apt quotation from Walt Whitman, in which he describes his weariness and consternation at an astronomical lecture—

Till rising and gliding out I wandered off by myself,
In the mystical moist night-air, and from time to time

The writer tells us how to find and to become acquainted with a large number of stars, planets, and constellations, and she does this in a plain, simple way, quite free from the technical language which baffles the unscientific mind. If the character of this work becomes generally known it can scarcely fail to have a very wide circulation. Prof. Jacoby of Columbia University warmly commends the book in a few graceful introductory words. The style is highly attractive, as may be seen in this quotation:

With one exception, Altair is the most attractive of the stars that rise during the early evening in Summer. By the middle of the first Summer month there is a lull in the noisy rush of the oncoming season. The dazzling blossoms of the fruit trees are scattered and almost forgotten, while the tiny green outlines of the fruit are quietly swelling toward their perfect form. The leaves on the forest trees have assumed their proper shape and are gradually expanding to full size. The old-fashioned annual roses are in their fullest glory. The bluejays have become stealthy and quiet, and most of the birds, while still in full song, have given over the frolicsome hilarity of the Spring for the serious work of the nesting time.

Then there comes a soft June evening, with its lovely twilight that begins with the last song of the wood thrush and ends with the first strenuous admonitions of the whippoorwill, and, almost as if it were an impulse of nature, one walks to the eastern end of the porch and looks for Altair.

The Way to Europe.

Brevity, convenience, and authority mark the little European guide-book originally written by Dr. W. J. Rolfe in 1870-2 and subsequently revised by him annually. (A Satchel Guide for the Vacation Tourist to Europe. 16mo. PP. 308. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin and Company $1.50). The book is "a compact itinerary of the British Isles, Belgium and Holland, Germany and the Rhine, Switzerland, France, Austria, and Italy," as is announced in the subtitle, but the fact should not be overlooked that fourteen full pages of introductory are devoted to advice to the tyro globe-trotter which is most valuable and suggestive. These pages deal with money, clothing and baggage for the trip, the convenience or necessity of passports, books to read, languages to learn, and foreign customs.

The "Satchel Guide" for 1907, although revealing many textual changes, has one feature of revision which is worthy of particular notice. This refers to the maps which have been brought down to date in respect to new railways, streets, bridges—a circumstance frequently ignored by certain more elaborate and otherwise important and authoritative guides. As usual the editor in his annual preface expresses his gratitude to those who have called his attention to alleged slips in former editions; he trusts that their critical interest may be continued.

BOSTON NOTES.

More Fiction—Some New, Some Old—Some Poetry and Other Notes.

DURING the civil war the weekly papers devoted to fiction abounded in stories of love bred during the correspondence of a hero and heroine unknown to one another, but brought into communication in various irregular ways, such as a soldier's advertisement for correspondents, or his perusal of a wonderful letter written to a comrade. The passage of years, the production of better stories, and the adoption of a stricter standard of etiquette have combined to make these stories a prey to dumb forgetfulness, and it is somewhat startling to find the hero and heroine of Miss Norah Davis's "The World's Warrant," playing an ingenious variation of the old game. The girl is not guilty of playing it for herself, but acts as the emanipensis of a beautiful, utterly illiterate, and ill-bred girl of bad character, whom the heroine and two others benevolently conspire to bestow upon an unknown but apparently honest Western advertiser for a wife. Their amiable intention has its reward in the discomfiture of some of their own pet schemes, but the story ends with a fair average of happiness for every one, after some uncommonly pretty wooing. This is the next novel on Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s list.

"The Castle of Doubt," Mr. John H. Whitson's novel, and "Jenifer," Mrs. Lucy Meachom Thruston's, announced by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. for April 13, have been postponed until May 4, and possibly their date of publication may be even later, for this week Patriots' Day cometh, when no man can work without being scorned by the unions. It is possible that to-morrow also may be a day of idleness, for the Bostonian, once so economical of time, now often declines to resume work for Saturday only.

Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co. are bringing out Mr. Arthur Davieon Ficke's "The Happy Princess" in a very pretty volume, containing also "Poems and Pilgrim Verses." The title poem, written from a mind saturated with Tennyson, Browning, and Keats, contains many good lines and some fine images and promises better things to come in spite of such rhymes as "dawn" and "on," and "love" and "of." For the latter, one may thank the New England school teachers, who, unsuccessful in their efforts to eliminate "aww" from the list of prepositions, have for fifty years instructed their pupils to pronounce "of" "uv." The first evil result was to make the dialect spinners print "would of" for "would have," in representing rapid speech; the second is this appalling rhyme. The third division of the book, "Pilgrim Verses," in which the author has expressed his notion of Oriental thought and story Japanese, Indian, Thibetan, Persian, is by far the best. Bound by no precedent of his English models, and apparently caring naught for Arnold, or for Mr. Kipling, or for FitzGerald, he here offers some forty pages that no reader will soon forget. Forty good pages! How many were there in "Poems by Two Brothers"?

The American Unitarian Association has produced President David Starr Jordan's "College and the Man" in a well-considered dress of sage-green boards, illuminoted by the name and a symbolic lamp in gold. The substance of the address, says the author, has been used many times in talking to high school boys and girls. The book should be in the libraries of all such institutions to dissuade pupils from electives, abbreviated and condensed courses of study, and premature haste to become earners instead of learners. The book is dedicated "To John Casper Branner (Jack Branner of the 'Cornell Strug'), otherwise Vice President of Leland Stanford University.

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. are to be the American publishers of Mr. Ernest Oldmeadow's "Susan," which has been highly commended in England, and of which other American publishers think well, judging by liberal offers made for the contract with the English publishers, and even for the serial rights. The author's first book was highly successful, and that counts for more now than in the old days of writing and copying by hand, when the author might be mentally transformed between the publication of two books.

Prof. J. D. M. Ford, now Smith Professor at Harvard, in succession to Ticknor, Longfellow, and Lowell, is writing the volume on "The Novel" to appear in the "Types of English Literature" series published under the editorship of Mr. William Allen Neilson. It will be remembered that the Smith Professorship was originally of the Romance Languages and English, the latter being of comparatively small importance in the days when spelling and the other branches of grammar were taught in the elementary schools and rhetoric in the high schools, but now a serious matter, when the college receives the boy in the state in which the grammar schools formerly left him. The "English" half of the work is now in the hands of Prof. Bliss Perry, but the name of "Smith" is held by the Romance chair.

The Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company has brought out Miss Nina Rhoades's "Priscilla and the Doll Shop" as a little square, fat volume, containing three stories each, one almost as long as any one of its author's former books, and two dealing with those cases of naughtiness in which children generally good occasionally outdo the feats of normal little sinners.

Miss Margaret Belle Houston, whose "Prairie Flowers" was published by Richard G. Badger the other day, represents the third generation of writers in her family, for she is the granddaughter of Gov. "Sam" Houston of Texas and the daughter of "Young Sam," both of whom were verse writers. Much of her work has been printed in Texas, but she has found her way into some Northern magazines. She is an entirely Southern educated girl, having been graduated from St. Mary's College, Texas. Mr. Badger also announces "In the Path of the Persian," by Stephen Magister, and "Sonnets to Dusa and Other Poems," by Miss Sara Teasdale.

Massachusetts folk are looking forward with no small interest to the publication of Miss Mary C. Crawford's "Old New England Inns," for many of these taverns, as obsolete speech named them, lingered until the bicycle and the motor car came to awaken them to a new although different life, and the word Turnpike may yet be found on more than one sign within the limits of the present State capital. Miss Crawford has wisely consulted not only history, but early American fiction, in making her description of the part played by the inn in New England life, and her work will be illustrated from rare and valuable pictures and photographs. It will be published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

The C. M. Clack Publishing Company is issuing Mr. Laurence R. Mansfield's "Fires of Desire" this week.

Mr. Arthur Upson of Minneapolis, the author of "The City," is in Boston, among friends. He will be remembered as the young writer whose work drew from the fastidious Aldrich the exclamation, "This young man is a poet." He is preparing two volumes to appear in the Autumn, and when his work is completed will sail for London, where he intends to spend the season, going later to Brittany, which he has made the scene of a coming dramatic poem.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, April 19, 1907.

A HOWELLS NOVEL.

SPRING book announcements have come at last to a novel from one of the bigger writers—William Dean Howells. The Harpers are publishing from him "Through the Eye of the Needle." The subject as well as the authorship of this novel promises unusual interest, for Mr. Howells is giving us a criticism of ourselves. In his introduction he comments upon American ways in a strain of kindly irony, and then proceeds to his story of a visit to America by a citizen of "Altruria." The hero records his observations on the domestic and public phases of American life, and comments upon them from the point of view of the ideals of his country. He falls in love with an American girl of the best type, who is, incidentally, rich. Her acceptance of him is delayed because in "Altruria" she could not enjoy the usual benefits of her money. But eventually the scene changes to the other land, and then Mr. Howells reverses the point of view of his observation.

New Stokes Books.

Three books on hygiene are to be brought out this Spring by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. They are "The Nutrition of Man," by Prof. Russell H. Chittenden of Yale; "The Art of Living in Good Health," by Dr. D. S. Sager, and "Worry," by Dr. C. W. Saleeby. Prof. Chittenden's book consists of a series of eight lectures, recently delivered in Boston, embodying the latest discoveries in "Fletcherism" and the transformation of food into energy and tissue, as shown by experiments on men and animals. "The Art of Living in Good Health" is a discussion of the many various doctrines of diet, and contains much practical advice. "Worry: The Disease of the Age," is a scientific exposition of the place occupied by worry as a factor in ill-health, and its various sources and cure.

Lessons in Story Writing.

The evasive art of short story writing is elucidated at last by E. M. Albright, who publishes this week, through Messrs. Macmillan, "The Short Story: Its Principles and Structure." Though no teaching can alone make a writer, there are many suggestions in this book purporting to help not only young writers, but readers, who wish to appreciate the technique and requirements of fiction. In the analysis of style and construction many successful novels are studied.

"This story, concerning Hilma, a princess royal, is a story of adventure—lively adventures, life, action, vivid happenings, stirring romance, and vigorous excitement keep one's interest at fever heat. It is unusually picturesque, dramatic, sparkling. They who love stories of adventure should not fail to read this tale of 'Hilma.'"—Grand Rapids Herald.

"The story is of the 'Pickup, never put down till the end kind,' warranted to displace the most obstinate case of worry or ennui."—Chicago Daily News.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

PROF. WALTER RALEIGH'S "Life of Shakespeare," in the English Men of Letters Series, strangely deferred until lives of many if not most of the English men of letters of lesser note had been written, will be published in England on Shakespeare's birthday, next Tuesday, and presumably will soon be in the American reviewers' hands. It is gratifying to learn that Prof. Raleigh has not tried to "throw new light" on the career of the foremost English man of letters and greatest of the world's poets. But sanity and moderation of judgment were to have been expected of Mr. Raleigh, himself a distinguished man of letters and an earnest student of literature. We know quite as much of Shakespeare as we are ever likely to know, and the reasons why we know so little, comparatively speaking, are perfectly plain. We know something about his personal appearance, his manners, his wit in conversation, from his contemporaries We know that he was born in Warwickshire, and that the charm and spell of the Warwickshire country are in his plays. We know that he went to school and learned some Latin, and that he knew his Bible. We know that he was a dramatist, actor, and manager, and that he made a great deal of money. We know that the actors were a despised class, in his era, and that most of the respectable middle-class folk disliked the theatre. We know that he had literary aspirations beyond the theatre, and it is no vain surmise that his realization that the careful publication of his poems did not advance his personal repute out of his own set may have caused him to neglect preparing his dramatic works for print. It does not matter. Shakespeare was Shakespeare, and a generation of neglect, a century or so of slight comprehension of his genius, and another century of silly denial of his identity has not dimmed the lustre of his fame. Mr. Raleigh's book will be most welcome, and is almost sure to deserve its place in a noteworthy series of biographies.

THE Academy of London makes the astonishing assertion that a very large percentage of the manuscript novels received by London publishing houses are written on expensive paper bearing the Government stamp. The inference is that "the whole strength of the Civil Service is engaged in the important work of literary production." If this assertion is well founded a Government inquiry is certainly needed. English civil servants have easy hours and good pay, and they might at least buy the paper they use for novel writing in their ample leisure. We believe they do. Moreover, we do not believe that the "whole strength" of the British Civil Service is employed in making novels. Some of the civil servants write poetry, which is hard work, and more of them play golf, a game which is very exacting in its demands on one's leisure, and, consequently, of great benefit to publishers' readers. The Academy's statement, also, loses force because it is coupled with the announcement that "nearly every middle-class woman in London" is now writing a novel. This, of course, is not true. Every London theatre manager can tell you that all the middle-class women and men are writing plays.

THE perennial newspaper subject of "Books that have helped me" is brought to mind by the announcement of the forthcoming sale at Sotheby's, in London, of Samuel Taylor Coleridge's copy of Robert Southey's "Life of Wesley," in two volumes, a work which we should hesitate to call a potboiler, but clearly not one that is often well remembered in connection with Southey's fame. It has always been known, however, that Coleridge liked the book, which was published in 1820, and that he called it his "favorite among favorite books." The "Life of Wesley," however, scarcely ranks with the short "Life of Nelson" among biographies, and nowadays, when we mention Southey, we are thinking of "The Curse of Kehama" and "Thalaba," though we may never have read them, (who has?) and "The Battle of Blenheim" rather than of his prose works. Coleridge's autograph is on the flyleaf of the first volume of his copy of the Wesley, with the expression of his desire that the work, after his death, should be returned to its donor, the author. Coleridge wrote:

The substance and character of the marginal annotations will abundantly prove the absence of any such intention in my mind at the time they were written, but it will not be uninteresting to him to know that the one or the other volume was more often in my hands than any other in my ragged book regiment.

These "marginal annotations" were, presumably, the notes by Coleridge that were used in the third edition of Southey's book. The reading of the greatest of English mystics and critics was enormous, and of a wonderfully varied character. It seems strange to be told, across the years, that Southey's "Life of Wesley" was more frequently in his hands than any other book in his library.

IN the town of Knutsford, in Cheshire, in England, a tower has been erected by Mr. R. H. Watt as a memorial to Elizabeth Cleghorn Gaskell, the novelist, who lived there in her girlhood, was married there, and was buried in the cemetery of the Unitarian chapel. Knutsford is the Cranford, celebrated for all time in that charming book of Mrs. Gaskell's, which is now the best known of the many she wrote. The tower is architecturally graceful and well built, and, although it is only seventy feet high, which is rather small for a tower, it harmonizes well with the other buildings on Knutsford's main street. This seems to be a sort of celebration year for Mrs. Gaskell's admirers. It is not her centenary, (she was born in 1810,) but there seems to be a general agreement that the time has come for the development of new interest in her books. We have frequently noted the appearance of the volumes in the handsome new edition of her complete works which the Putnams are publishing here—the Knutsford edition, it is called—with introductory essays by Dr. A. W. Ward. Volumes recently at hand are "Wives and Daughters," "Cousin Phillis," "My Lady Ludlow," "North and South," and "Sylvia's Lovers."

THOMAS WRIGHT'S new "Life of Walter Pater" (Putnam) is still the subject of heated discussion in London, where the author's prefatory disparagement of Mr. A. C. Benson, his predecessor as biographer of Pater, was resented by many reviewers, thereby securing for the book timely and readable notices. Mr. Wright is a painstaking biographer, and a very alert man, with the skill to take advantage of his opportunities. The discussion of his book, to which he has ably taken part, must have enormously increased its sales. Mr. Wright has lately been accused of attributing Pater's success to his friend Jackson, as he attributed Burton's translation of "The Arabian Nights" to Payne. In the matter of Payne and Burton he made out a very good case. His statement of the facts, as he found them, was clear. He declares now that Pater owed nothing to Jackson but sympathy, inspiration and encouragement. Jackson was the original of Marius the Epicurean. Wright contends, in a newspaper letter, that of Pater's contemporaries only Lady Dilke really understood him:

She could see that Pater's knowledge of most of the subjects upon which he wrote was superficial. In short, he was to art very much what Goldsmith was to zoology. He was not a deep student. He picked up his knowledge haphazard as he went about. He did not go to the root of things. But he was more than a scholar. He was a man of genius. He illuminated everything he touched. I love the man, (deploring, of course, the one lamentable stain on his life,) and I love his works, but I should only have stultified myself had I described him as a profound student of art. A hundred better men than I would instantly have ridiculed me. When writing a book I never ask myself whether any fact I may have disinterred tells for or against the person who forms the subject. In goes everything. Some persons like my method, others do not. My motto is, "Truth at all costs."

I know no author who is better at a bargain as to so much "per thou" than Mr. Zangwill; I know no journalist who has given editors so much trouble in past years as to the precise amount he should receive per column as Mr. Bernard Shaw. On the other hand, Mr. Zangwill has given to the ideal—some of us think a most fantastic ideal—of Zionism an infinity of labor which if devoted to writing new novels would have brought him hundreds of sheckels that he has had to forego. Mr. Bernard Shaw again is the least mercenary of human beings. He is generosity personified, although his hatred of cant sometimes leads to his being misunderstood on this point.

LONDON NEWS.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, April 10.—An experiment which is being tried by a London publisher, David Nutt, shows plainly the recent change in the English attitude toward French novels. There was a time, not so long ago, either, when the reading of French novels was a habit we looked at askance. If an English novelist wanted to indicate that one of his fictitious personages was a person of very shaky morals, he had only to mention that the table of her boudoir, or his library, was "littered with yellow-backed French novels." The adjective "French," as applied to books, was, to the ordinary mind, synonymous with "immoral." All this is changed now, however, and it is proposed to issue, especially for English readers, a long series of French books which shall be bound in cloth, instead of the yellow paper covers of yore. This, to the Englishman, who is fond of solid, lasting things, shows that the disposition now is to make the French novel an honored item in the library, instead of a temporary distraction, to be read on the sly, and flung in the fire at the approach of disapproving visitors.

Talking about French novels, an English novelist tells me that he thinks the best English stylists of recent years have been men who have been enthusiastic readers of French literature. In his opinion, the reading of French is an almost indispensable preparation for writing well in English.

A VERY important book for connoisseurs of the fine arts will be issued by Messrs. Grevel. It is "Italian Bronze Statuettes of the Renaissance," and the author is Dr. William Bode, Director General of the Royal Museums in Berlin. He is said to be incomparably the greatest authority on the subject. The book will be published in ten parts, at a net price of more than $60 for the whole. One of the best collections of Italian Renaissance bronzes is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan's, now deposited in the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington.

FISHER UNWIN announces two interesting books, both written in English by foreigners. One is "Sweden's Rights," by a Swede, who calls himself Ankers Svenske, and who predicts the reunion of Sweden and Norway, under possible conditions. The other is "The Soul of a Priest," by Duke Litta, an Italian, who may have been helped by his wife, an American lady, in the difficult task of writing a novel in English.

FRANCIS GRIFFITH is to publish a Concordance, containing a complete list of the characters and places mentioned in Charles Dickens's works. GALBRAITH.

DR. HERTER'S WORKS.

TWO different houses will publish this month medical books from the pen of Dr. Christian A. Herter, long known through the results of his medical research, and of late Professor of Pharmacology and Therapeutics at Columbia University. Messrs. Macmillan are issuing an important new work entitled "The Common Bacterial Infections of the Digestive Tract." Messrs. Putnam publish "Diagnosis of Organic Nervous Diseases." This manual teaching the diagnosis of nervous diseases appeared before in different form and under different title, the continued demand for it making its revision and reissue advisable. The revision of the present edition has been done by Dr. L. Pierce Clark.

The Rev. Mr. Aked in Print.

The Rev. Charles F. Aked, for some time a prominent pastor in Liverpool, England, and just now in New York in response to a call to the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, arranged by letter with Fleming H. Revell & Co. before sailing to have his first sermon, to be preached tomorrow, taken immediately by the publishers, who are to have it ready in the form of a booklet for distribution the Sunday following. In this sermon Mr. Aked will outline his religious platform. In the near future Messrs. Revell will issue a volume of Dr. Aked's sermons under the title of "The Courage of the Coward."

APRIL

THE BICENTENARY OF HENRY FIELDING.

First English Writer Who Made the Novel a "Criticism of Life"—His View of British Society.

IT really does not seem that Henry Fielding would be 200 years old if he had lived to see the twenty-second day of this current month of April. That he does not seem so remote from us as that is explained by the lasting humanity of his work. If he was not quite the father of the English novel, he stood not far from its source, only Defoe and Richardson, of famous names, antedating him. But how much nearer he is than they, how much nearer than Richardson, who was his contemporary, and who derived considerable comfort from despising him or pretending to do so! Richardson was no doubt of his age, of that periwigged Georgian age which for many purposes is further away from us than the Elizabethan. Yet in comparison with Richardson what a "modern" Fielding is! How, as Carlyle puts it, he "holds of the perennial."

Doubtless he suffered in the estimation of his contemporaries as a novelist by their knowledge of the recklessness and the Bohemianism of the man. Like Thackeray a century later, he was driven into writing by his own dissipation of his own patrimony. In his case the patrimony was dissipated by "horses and hounds," and in Thackeray's by more reputable and accredited modes of dissipation. But each of them was in literature an amateur, "and proud of the title," and the amateurism is part of the charm of each. In Fielding's time one may say that there were no professional men of letters. To live by writing one had to be a playwright, a bookseller's hack, or a bookseller, like Richardson, in whose favor it was that he had so reputable a calling. Everybody began by trying to write plays, even the undramatical Johnson, who nevertheless came up from Lichfield to London with the tragedy of "Irene" in his pocket.

The plays with which Fielding began were by no means classical tragedies. They were farces and low comedies supposed to be reflective of the current life of London. But they are quite as illegible now as the tragedy which Johnson extracted from Knolles's "History of the Turks." In truth, if one had to choose reading matter for a desert island, he would rather take "Irene." But some of them saw him through the week, possibly some through the month, before he found his true vocation as a novelist. There was nothing academic or conventional about him there. "Joseph Andrews," though an avowed and unkind ekit upon the "Pamela" of the solemn Richardson; "Amelia," and, most of all, "Tom Jones"—these have been accepted ever since as "criticisms of life"—not the avowed satire of "Jonathan Wild," which Swift, for example, would have done so much better.

To most readers "Tom Jones" is not only Fielding's masterpiece, as it is to all, but it is the gum and substance of his achievement. The words of his succeeding "amateur" in the preface to "Pendennis" are not to be forgotten: "Since the author of 'Tom Jones' was buried no writer of fiction among us has been permitted to depict to his utmost power a Man." Thackeray himself was not, in the very novel thus introduced. The episode of Fanny Bolton is very lightly touched compared with the matter which makes the stuff of "Tom Jones." It is a difference of authors as well as a difference of times. Squire Western and the rest did not survive in their native British coarseness to furnish studies for Thackeray. That they were really shocking to contemporary readers, we have abundant evidence, as none of Thackeray's characters was shocking to his contemporaries. But the main difference is that Thackeray, in spite of his brag, did not venture to emulate the frankness of his predecessor and "to depict to his utmost power a Man."

Whatever the source of Fielding's courage, he had the courage of his observation, had it in a degree beyond any British writer of anything like his power in his own or in a subsequent generation, had it in a fullness to equal which we must cross the British Channel, where, paradoxically, an equal frankness takes no courage at all. Perhaps it was his personal Bohemianism that gave him the courage. It remains a wonder how in that generation Fielding, in spite of his defiant unconventionality, obtained the "pull" to become a Magistrate, and, according to all report, an energetic and useful Magistrate. It is no wonder at all how that friend of the established respectabilities, Dr. Johnson, ventured to describe him as a "blockhead," and feeling, even he, a little ashamed of that crudity, added, "When I say a blockhead I mean a barren rascal," and proceeded to contrast him to his disadvantage with Richardson. One had to be a good deal in Bohemia, and perhaps a little in Coventry, to draw such outside and detached pictures of "British Society" as Fielding drew. But he had his reward, for his picture was of life, in spite of the supplementary Johnsonian grawl, "Sir, it is of very low life." But Samuel did himself an injustice, for did he not admit, or proclaim, that he read "Amelia" through at one sitting? It is by his perceptions and the courage of his perceptions, and also, to be sure, by the skill with which he rendered his perceptions, that Fielding did the work which has a chance of being read and considered for yet another century, and so far surpassed his contemporaries and his predecessors that he is entitled to be called the first British novelist.

BY means of a series of letters written by a man represented as a young English author to a charming young woman, Mr. Charles Hare Plunkett has made an intimate and revealing study of a peculiar, and probably an uncommon, temperament. At the beginning of the letters it appears that the man had just removed himself from the immediate vicinity of the lady, that he is very much in love with her, and that she is not unwilling to accept and return his affection. He makes known his love to her delicately and tenderly, but tells her that they cannot marry for two reasons—his ambition and his temperament. If he should marry her he would at once give up everything else and devote himself to being her husband, whereas he has already devoted his life to the muse of literature, and he could not serve them both. Moreover, if he should marry she would cease to be to him a sweet and unattained mystery, and therefore would be less inspiring and less lovable. But he wants to keep up between them a sort of lover-friendship, to be carried on by means of voluminous letters, in which they are to reveal their souls to each other, and he, at least, is to cover pages of foolscap describing his temperament and his moods to his sweetheart confessor. He tells her frequently that if she calls him he will fly to her side. He confesses that he hopes she will do so, but at the same time he begs that she will not, that she will take pity upon his weakness and help him to hold to his decision. The letters continue through six months or more, and then the young woman puts an end to his fantastical arrangement of their two futures by stopping the correspondence.

The author has shown not a little good craftsmanship in the skill with which he has made the letters reveal the man's character—his weaknesses and limitations and perverse ideas about life, his refinement, gentleness, and tenderness. It is not a manly enough character to arouse much admiration in the reader's mind. But it is painted, with all its curious limitations and contradictions, very clearly and convincingly.

An exhaustive summary of the work of cavalry in war as related to the probable conditions of future conflicts. A plea for the cavalry as an arm of attack apart from its value as a mounted rifle force. BIOGRAPHIES MADE USEFUL.

THE inadequacy of the usual name index attached to a biographical cyclopedia is strikingly illustrated by what George Derby has done in a "Conspectus to the National Cyclopaedia of American Biography." This biography, as everybody knows, contains the names and achievements of Americans who have made history. But the usual name index proves an inadequate key to the treasures locked up in the work if one would go beyond personalities. These treasures Mr. Derby has unlocked.

It requires no strain of credulity to imagine that a history of this country in its constitutional, political, sociological, economic, literary, and artistic phases might be extracted from an exhaustive study of the biographies of the Cyclopaedia. But who has the time to make such a study when one would like immediate answers to such questions as: Who was United States Minister to France in 1818? Who was President of Princeton College at the same time? What American authors were living when John Howard Payne wrote "Home, Sweet Home?" Who were the candidates for President when Jackson was elected? What prominent Americans are dealt with in book, poem, or play? What were their notable sayings? What were their last words? What are the anniversaries connected with American achievements?

Answers to these questions are, of course, to be found in the "National Cyclopaedia of American Biography," but the search for the proverbial needle in the haymow would be relegated as a pastime by one who attempted to reach them by no other means than an index of names.

By alphabetical lists, tables, and cross-references Mr. Derby has compiled a work built up from an exhaustive analysis of the biographies in the Cyclopaedia so that answers to these and a thousand other questions may be almost instantly reached. From every biography in the Cyclopaedia every fact has been extracted and classified. That, in a phrase, is the principle of the Conspectus which will prove invaluable to any one who may require the most abstract or remote information concerning the facts in date and circumstance which go to make up the history of this country in all its multiple and varied phases and characteristics. Mr. Derby's work is as important as that of an explorer who opens up a new country for industrial and commercial activity. The treasures were there. Mr. Derby has made them available for all.

"What to do in the garden in May" is the timely theme of the current issue of

Among its many articles of interest to those who own gardens is one on the best of the quick-growing temporary vines, which will appeal to every owner of a house. It tells how porches and verandas may be quickly transformed into beautiful and shady bowers; unsightly fences and trellises into objects of novel attraction.

For the person with home grounds to decorate, "All the azaleas worth growing," "How to make an azalea bed," and "Bulbs for May planting" are three articles of great interest.

Special information about table corn, squashes, the broad bean, and the small kitchen-garden is also contained in this well-filled and valuable number.

Take a copy home with you tonight; the illustrations alone are worth much more than the newsman will ask you for it.

THE VIEWS OF MANY READERS.

Protests from Admirers of The Capital Articles of Hildegarde Hawthorne—Other Subjects Discussed.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

IT is not vital to Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne that any one should champion her, but it would be downright pusillanimous if some or us women did not take up arms against Mr. Hubert H. Harrison for his altogether ungracious summary—not to use a more adequately descriptive term—of the delightful columns on "Woman in All Ages," in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, April 6.

It isn't that gallantry is expected. Miss Hawthorne would be the first to repudiate such an idea. One can guess from her personality, overflowing every sentence, that she enjoys a doughty opponent. Only let the opponent be doughty. Not, as in this instance, simply "grumpy." Yet I venture to say that Mr. Harrison, tête-à-tête with the object of his literary scorn, would be captivated by these same sentiments, couched in precisely the same language. More, he would come away feeling that he had enjoyed a special privilege, maybap an honor. Now, why is be so unreasonable, when Miss Hawtborne addresses him—as much as any other—in print? Apparently because what she says does not dovetail with some ideas of his own as to what a book review ought to be.

Mr. Harrison complains that he can gather nothing of the book from Miss Hawthorne's review of it. Why need he? If she has succeeded in making any one curious about the work, interested to know more of it, she has done her part, and for the rest one may go to Dr. Donaldson. To make us impatient to read the book reviewed is not the least of the reviewer's triumphs.

To meet Mr. Harrison's ideal, the reviewer in question would have to give over the very things everybody else admires most in her writing. The unborrowed and unbiased expression of opinion, for instance. Then the essentially womanly point of view; the alert observation, the humorous penetration—oh, a score of things which now make her essays so intensely individual and human. It is this essence of femininity which Mr. Harrison does not understand, but which is definable by him only as the schoolgirl giggle.

This is too much! But admitting for a moment that the review is all a "rehash," where, pray, will he find anything of the sort that does not contain the original ingredients? A new light on an old subject is all we can look for in a world of much-worn and faded ideas. And to me it seems a great deal to be grateful for, to have them freshened, made over, by just such brilliant rays as flow from Hildegarde Hawthorne's pen.

II.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

May I dissent from Mr. Harrison's opinion that Miss Hawthorne is "impossible as a critic for the first page," and concur in THE NEW YORK TIMES's recent editorial appreciation of her articles? The one on "Woman and Her Position" seemed to me excellent, and I sent several copies to distant friends that they might share my pleasure. Criticism is not confined, as Mr. Harrison seems to imply, to comparison of ancient with modern authors; and while sympathetic treatment of the subject reviewed may be unusual it is not an offense against art.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Feeling chafed by your correspondent's remarks in your last issue about Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne's work, I may perhaps be permitted to say a few words. Attacks of this kind may cause a momentary annoyance, but are powerless to do any serious injury. Hamlet counsels the Players that even in the whirlwind of passion they "must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness"; and it is well to remember that this holds good as a maxim for literary work.

For several months I have been reading Miss Hawthorne's essays with pleasure and admiration; and the particular review chosen for this harsh criticism was in no respect crude or immature. In common with Miss Hawthorne's other work, it was distinguished by warm appreciation, clear analysis, kindly humor, and was graced by that charm of literary distinction which so well befits her high lineage. I have not the honor of the lady's acquaintance, and therefore am not writing from any personal motive, but simply in the interest of fair play.

John Addington Symonds.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

May I express an opinion as to Horatio F. Brown's recent shorter life of Symonds, "imported by the Scribners"? Brown, whom I was, a priori, disposed to regard worshipfully as Symonds's friend, is either a poor protagonist or has erred in the selection of such material from "the mass of letters, diaries, notebooks, and memoranda" as would portray a character always admirable as well as lovable; or else these "materials" were such as to make a different choice impossible.

In this latter case we are thrown back upon the conclusion that Brown saw Symonds with eyes unblinded by affection, and was impelled in his compilation of the biography only by a wish to truthfully portray him to the world, or rather to the charmed circle who would know their Symonds. Brown, on the other hand, may have realized that duality in Symonds's nature which made Stevenson say that while talking to him and "listening to the voice of the sirens he still heard the barking of the Sphinx."

Our biographer, who has in any case merited our gratitude in bringing the life of John Addington Symonds within reach of many who could not own the two-volume life by reason of its scarcity and expense, (I have only found it on hand in Edinburgh and at Blackwell's, Oxford,) might, it would seem, profitably have omitted in selecting from it the too thinly veiled allusions to a habit of thought which manifestly told upon Symonds's health of body and mind. If his divagations were purely speculative and his nature as lovable as it appeared to Stevenson and Sidgwick and his daughter Margaret, one deplores the laying stress upon the period of his Oxford life which produced "In the Key of Blue."

As to his later life, especially that in touch with his daughter Margaret, one knows of no personal and intellectual relation more beautiful. She tells us in the biography of his last ill days in Rome, brave days his admirers will love to reread, days ending an almost preternaturally courageous life of great achievement despite ill-health, an invalid life free from petty selfishness, and devoted along its broadest lines to human betterment. Like Clough, "he wandered till he died," but for him we feel as for the Scholar Gypsy, "the light he sought is shining still," guiding him to the infinite he sought imperfectly on earth.

"The Silent Door."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In a recent issue of the NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW there appeared a long and interesting notice of Florence Wilkinson's new book, "The Silent Door." While this notice was still fresh in my memory I read the book, and the impression made upon my mind by the chief character, Little Rue Penrith, is so unlike that made upon the mind of your reviewer that I have been wondering ever since which of us represents the average and unselfconscious reader.

Never before in fiction have I met a child at once so individual and so true to life. It is a remarkable portrayal of an unusual child; a portrayal as delicate and revealing, and—to my way of thinking—even more convincing than that of Sentimental Tommy in Mr. Barrie's exquisite story. Rue is not intended for a commonplace child—by way of contrast and revelation, her little cousin, Justine, fulfills that role to perfection. On the contrary, Miss Wilkinson's little heroine is gifted, unusual, individual. But she is none the less deliciously childlike and real, and there is about her that fragrant suggestion of other worldliness which is the sweetest trait of normal childhood. Now, if there is any word in the English language which should not be applied to such a child it is the word "sophisticated." Yet that is precisely the word which is used by your reviewer to characterize the little Rue, whose outlook is pre-eminently that to which all things seem:

"Appareled in celestial light,
The glory and the freshness of a dream."

And though little Rue is a gifted and unusual child, she is not precocious—if the term precocious carries any suggestion of abnormal development. She does not "babble Latin declensions," but they recur to her in nightmarish fashion, as foreseen punishments. Also any imaginative child of six, who has been brought up on Milton, might repeat his verses as naturally as another child would repeat "Mother Goose" rhymes. As for Rue's old-fashioned phraseology, it is not one whit more precocious than that of other observant and intelligent children. Her favorite descriptive word, "excellent," happens to fill precisely a like place in the vocabulary of my 7-year-old boy, and has done so for a long time. He has just been telling me of a personal adventure in which a pond and a raft figured prominently, and the raft, to quote my son, was "excellently well made."

To your reviewer, then, Rue Penrith is sophisticated and precocious, while to me, one of the readers of "The Silent Door," she is a revelation and a delight, one of the few true and masterly delineations of child character in all literature. And I have been intimately associated with children all my life while a child and ever since. I wonder whether (I make no accusation), but I wonder whether your reviewer of "The Silent Door" could make the same boast?

A Literary Burglary.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Saturday morning, April 6, on my way from my house to Euston to take the transatlantic train, I called at my office, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, London, where, to my surprise, I found a Police Inspector, two detectives, and my usually cool staff in a very excited state. I soon discovered the reason of the presence of the majesty of the law, for my publishing office had been burgled.

Vigo Street has long been known as a centre for Golden Thoughts and Silver Plate. Perhaps I should state that all the shops in the street but four are either goldsmiths, silversmiths, or publishers, hence it has sometimes been called Golden Lane.

This seems to be the first time that burglars have taken to active literary pursuits and preferred Golden Thoughts rather than Silver Plate. It must be acknowledged that recently these gentlemen have displayed a commendable interest in art, but this is probably the first occasion that their attention has been seriously turned to literature. I feel, however, that the result of their enterprise will not be so easily converted into that modern trinity, £ s. d., as if they had turned their friendly attention to my neighbors' silver, which I can so highly recommend.

It is interesting to study the tastes of my new clientèle, which I am now able to do from my stock clerk's inventory. As might be expected, all the stock of "The Golden Age" and "The Quest of the Golden Girl" had disappeared. We also found that the bin in which "The Champagne Standard" is kept had been drained. As for "A Boy's Marriage," that had been left intact. It did not probably prove to the taste of this moral critic. Oddly enough, a set of proof sheets of a detective story by Mr. A. C. Fox-Davies, entitled "The Finances of Sir John Kynnersley," had been taken. This threatens to become a public danger, as the author at great pains elaborates many ingenious schemes for fraudulently obtaining large sums of money, for which reason the police and the public at large are urged to be on their guard.

This new force in literature seems to be greatly interested in Napoleon, as several copies of "Napoleon's Conquest of Prussia" and "Napoleon's Conquest of Poland," together with "The Boyhood and Youth of Napoleon" and "The Fall of Napoleon" have enriched the collections of my unknown patrons. This latest literary movement does not display any great interest in the "New Theology," as both "The Creed of Christ" and Mr. Chesterton's "Heretics" were untouched. Perhaps Bodley Head theology is not quite orthodox enough for these new searchers after truth. On the other hand, not a single copy of "The Beloved Vagabond" remains. This Mr. Locke, the author, should regard not only as a touching but as an active tribute to him from a kindred spirit of his own vagabond.

One literary coincidence it is interesting to note, and that is the burglars seemed to entirely agree with the criticisms in The London Times of M. P. Willcocks's "The Wingless Victory," where it stated that "Such books are worth keeping on the shelves, even by the classics," for not a single copy is missing. There is no trace of any of these new collectors having a book plate, but there is abundant proof that they had book marks, for their thumb and finger prints have been photographed at Scotland Yard. The moral, it would seem, for authors who desire to have a wide circulation among burglars, at any rate, is always to select titles with either a metallic or a liquid sound.

Ministers of the Past.

"The ministers of the past generation were a grim and unrelenting group to whom happiness meant the uprooting of all the lovely flowers of life for the sake of a future quite unrelated to this bitter training."—Hildegarde Hawthorne in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, March 30.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I have just read these words and cannot willingly let them pass in silence. Miss Hawthorne must have been exceedingly unfortunate in what she has been told or heard of these worthy men. There rises before my mind's eye the figure of the genial Rev. Andrew Peabody, afterward of Harvard, on his way to church in Salem, his pulpit robe flowing around him on the street, and escorting on his arm Miss Elizabeth Peabody, Miss Hawthorne's grandmother's brilliant sister. I did not call him grim when, as a child, I met him at my aunt's on an exchange. The early and middle and later middle years of my life were passed among lawyers and clergymen, and, were I asked which were the most genial, cheery, and apparently enjoying life, I should say the ministers. I can include one, the Rev. Mr. Gilee, whose Irish wit electrified audiences in lecture halls all through the country; another, of charming personality, from green Erin, a missionary from Africa, "uncle" to the mission daughters sent here for their school education, others on their way to mission fields in Turkey, Africa, China, and India, many professors in theological seminaries, one afterward Consul at Jerusalem.

I recall among many others the genial and accomplished Dr. William B. Sprague of Albany, the collector of many autographs and gift books from their authors; Dr. Hume of Boston, who could still scatter the flowers of poesy in old age; Dr. Kirk, whose very presence was a rare benediction; the witty and eccentric Mr. Swett of Lynn, who, when a working parishioner exeused his absence from church because he must needs earn even on Sunday, hired the man for that day, set him to reading the Bible and learning a hymn between the services, and at night paid him for his day's work, which the man acknowledged was the hardest he had ever experienced. Another, pleading lack of footgear to present himself among well-dressed people, the parson drew off his own boots, and rode home unshod. Going to meet Dickens at the dinner given him in Boston, Mr. Swett told the author that he had been busy searching to bring him as a curiosity a man who had never heard of him. At last, deeming himself successful, the name of Boz (the cognomen by which Dickens was then popularly known) happened to be spoken, when the man exclaimed: "Boz! I know Boz!" and the parson went to the dinner alone. Once, in preaching to a congregation where things had been permitted to run down, Mr. Swett gave out the hymn, and added: "If the congregation can find it in their books it is missing from mine." It was not very long before the people built a new church in a fashionable part of the city.

These men were of various denominations. One I recall as introducing among his hesitating parishioners the floral decoration of the church. They enjoyed life and made others enjoy it. Their ministrations to the sick and suffering, of course, none can deny. As a few weeks bring my eightieth anniversary, I may perhaps be permitted to bear my testimony to the genial ministers of the east who have gone before me. Peace and honor to their ashes. C. L. S.

In the Twilight.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The following verses were dedicated to Donald Grant Mitchell (Ik Marvel) on the occasion of his eighty-fifth birthday, April 12, 1907:

"The aefen-glom" our Saxon fathers said
Of that dim, mystic fading of the day,
When all the glow of brightness passed away,
And deep, gray shadows took the place of red:
A time of gloom: to them the day was dead;
They watched the fading of the less'ning ray;
They heard the night winds sweeping on their way;
They looked not for the day-dawn just ahead.

We see it now with far, far different eyes—
This mystic time which we the twilight call:
It stands a milestone now 'twixt two great days.

The lights of glory on our vision fall,
Eternity's great shore breaks on our gaze,
And we lift up our hearts in glad surprise.

"The Far Horizon."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The carping critic, I believe, does not hold a very high place in general esteem, but there are occasions to justify his existence. So, when one of your correspondents refers to Lucas Malet's "The Far Horizon" as the best novel recently published (or words to that effect) I humbly beg leave to carp. My objection to the book is a very prosaic one and has escaped your correspondent's notice, without doubt, because he was more occupied with broad effects than with minutiæ.

For this reason apparently he failed to observe how exceedingly ill-written is "The Far Horizon." Let me offer a few specimens:

On Page 29 you will find the following example of English undefiled: "Of all kinds of uselessness, that of we godlike human beings," &c. On Page 66 is displayed an equally grammatical exhibit: "• • • unless he was well assured beforehand whom such persons might be." And yet the author comments upon her heroine's use of the merely syncopated expression "More fools they!" as "a fine disregard for grammar."

However, the proofs have been abominably read, and Mrs. Harrison may not be responsible for the above-mentioned atrocities. But she will have to plead guilty of double dealing with the present perfect tense. It's down in black and white on Page 112: "It would have been difficult for her • • • to have stated." There are one or two more.

Third count: obscurity and general messiness of language and ideas. See Page 114, (near bottom): "All [women] are not enigmas equally well worth finding out." Cannot you picture to yourself some cruel, cruel college theme reader running his ruthless red crayon through such expressions as "very comfortless," Page 182: "twilight and embryonic regions," Page 118, and "love, which • • • makes marriage otherwise than an outrage," and writing sarcastic scholiae in the margin?

Misplaced emphasis is another offense that the author commits. Witness this sentence from Page 196: "Thence the skirt flowed down in a froth of rose-scarlet gaugings and fluted frills which trailed behind her far." I wonder if you will feel, as I felt, when you read that—exactly as if you had stubbed your toe on something. I wonder, as Serena says. And I notice that Mrs. Harrison has not yet got rid of that cheap, Smart-Aleck barbarism "well understood" for "of course," which she so frequently perpetrated in "Sir Richard Calmady."

Enough of carping! Let's part friends, Mr. Correspondent. Mrs. Harrison and you will well understood be pleased to know that I think "The Far Horizon" après tout not so bad. The characterization of Serena Lovegreve—to adopt the language of publishers' notices—approaches Dickens at his happiest. And you are wrong in thinking the last scene of "The Far Horizon" as good as the twenty-second chapter of "Richard Feveral." It is better. For the death of Richard Feveral was plain, premeditated, cold-blooded, first-degree murder at the hands of that literary felon, George Meredith, whereas Dominic Igiesias died a natural, and hence profoundly moving, death. That last chapter is all right. I remain, Yours pacifically,

Proposed Poe Monument.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Another Poe monument movement has been started in Baltimore. A local newspaper has taken up the matter, and day after day communications are printed, giving the opinions of all sorts of people, school teachers, doctors, lawyers, college professors, "literary" women, and the one solitary professional man of letters of whom the city can boast.

All this excitement was started by a Frenchman, who, hearing that Poe's grave in Westminster Churchyard, Baltimore, was not decorated on the ninety-eighth anniversary of his birth, (Jan. 19, 1907,) grew indignant, and wrote a furious letter denouncing the provincialism of Baltimore and declaring that Poe's genius is of that "lofty and glorious order that misses the rabids altogether." "Rabble" is a rude name to apply to the cultured people of the Southern metropolis.

Monumental honors can add little or nothing to the great fame of Edgar A. Poe. Genius rears its own monument, a monument more enduring than brass or marble. In strolling through the classic streets of Rome we meet, in one direction, the stately column of Trajan; in another we view, with astonishment, the enormous ruins of the Baths of Diocletian, while far away from both of these the Pyramid of Cestius raises its lofty head. But in all Rome there is no statue, no monument, no column to commemorate Julius Cæsar, the greatest of the Romans. Rome itself is an all-sufficient monument of him who made Rome immortal and carried her name and his to the ends of the ancient world. Poe's rare and remarkable genius has given him a high and splendid place in the American literary firmament, has placed him a fixed star among the immortal names that were not born to die. Whatever is done to honor him in the city where his ancestors lived, and where he died in the flower of his manhood, will redound to the credit of the people of Baltimore.

The present Poe monument movement recalls a similar movement eleven years ago, when a large meeting was held in McCoy Hall, Johns Hopkins University. The Mayor of the city presided. Resolutions were passed, addresses were made, and "The Edgar Allan Poe Memorial Association of Baltimore" was organized, with Daniel Colt Gilman of the Johns Hopkins University as President, together with a Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer. Dr. Appleton Morgan, the Founder and President of the New York Shakespeare Society, whose broad and liberal mind is always responsive when genius calls, came on from New York and addressed the meeting in behalf of its object. That was the first and last effort of "the Edgar Allan Poe Memorial Association of Baltimore." Fortunately the present movement is in different hands, and may result in something practical.

In conclusion, I wish to say that an amazing lot of ignorance has been displayed by some of the advocates of the proposed monument. Prof. Charles W. Hodell, head of the department of English at the Woman's College, writes: "Poe made his first literary success in Baltimore in winning the prize for 'The Gold Bug.'" It is true that Poe won his first success in Baltimore, but it was not with "The Gold Bug," but with the "MS. Found in a Bottle." "The Gold Bug" was written in Philadelphia in 1843, and won a prize of $100, offered by The Dollar Magazine. I have been very much surprised that Miss Sara Sigourney Rice, who took so active and important a part in securing the funds for the erection of the monument over Poe's grave, should persist in saying the monument was unveiled in 1877, and that the letter of Tennyson upon the subject of an epitaph was written in the same year. The monument was unveiled on the 17th of November, 1875, and Tennyson's letter was dated Feb. 18, 1875. I was present at the unveiling as the representative of The New York Tribune, and have verified the date by referring to my account of the proceedings published at the time. Miss Rice's "Memorial Volume" shows that these are the right dates. EUGENE L. DIDIER.

Guild of Book-Workers.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The "Guild of Book-Workers," composed of the amateur and other binders and printers, illuminators, engravers, &c., will give its first annual exhibition at the old Tiffany Studios, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street, on April 24-29 inclusive.

This exhibition will be an exceedingly interesting affair for the reason that books will also be exhibited in process of being bound, the original William Morris Kelmscott press will be in operation by a private printer, &c.

Illustrations will be given by amateur binders of the various processes through which a book passes before the final tooling is done. The guild has had great success in attracting members, inasmuch as almost all the States in the Union are represented. This exhibit will form the largest collection of American amateur work ever gathered together and will give the patrons of fine binding an opportunity of seeing what is now being done in this country. While admission tickets are not a sine qua non, they can be obtained of the Secretary, Mrs. Ruth Starrett, 347 West Eighty-fifth Street. M. L. K.

By W. D. Howells

Done in this great master's most delightful manner, this novel tells the whimsical story of how a certain kind of what might be called socialism really works. A traveller from Altruria falls in love with, and marries, a charming American woman, takes her to Altruria, where she has an interesting time learning how to live in a country which has no money, and where one can get things only by working three hours a day—a country where you can't tell a cook from a lord, or a farmer from a poet.

The Cruise of the "Shining Light"

By Norman Duncan

This is an unusual story, unusually told. It is a story of the lives of three people: a boy, an old man, and a girl whom the boy grows to love.

It is a story of to-day, yet full of the mystery of a more romantic time. There is humor in it and dramatic spirit and tenderness and the same fine manly religious feeling found in Mr. Duncan's earlier book.

The people, minor characters and all, are live people, and when you finish the story they seem like old friends—people you are sorry to part from.

The Long Trail

By Hamlin Garland

This is a tale of adventure—the story of a boy who goes to the Klondike over the old Telegraph Trail. Like Treasure Island, it is a story which older readers will enjoy reading even more than young folks.

It is rich in outdoor adventures, perils, and bravery. Cold and heat, hunger and thirst, the lure of gold, and the rivalry of fierce men go to make up the vivid and varied life in the famous Yukon gold-fields.

The Mystics

By Katherine Cecil Thurston

Scene follows scene with the same persistent excitement and breathless fascination which marked Mrs. Thurston's former novel, The Masquerader. A story of romance and mystery.

MYRA KELLY AMONG THE HILLS.

A Talk With the East Side Chronicler in Her Country Home—The Author of "Felicity"—Experiences of Norah Davis.

OTIS NOTMAN.

MYRA KELLY, the chronicler of east side life, is living among the Orange Mountains. I went out there to see her, and was initiated into the wonders of the proposed new village, Oldchester, as it is to be called, in the construction of which she and her husband are so interested. We drove from the house where they are living now to the new home they are building. We passed the land where the village green is being laid out, on to what they call Oldchester Farm, where the new house is located. The house is nearly completed, and stands on the crest of a hill, at an elevation of something like a thousand feet. There is a wonderful view in every direction, and in three directions one can see for fifty miles or more. There are rolling hills and valleys and stretches of meadow land, and clumps of trees, and not far from the house is a thick wood. The air was keen and bracing, and one might have been in the Berkshires, and it came to me with a sort of shock that New York City in a straight line was only twelve miles away, just over beyond the first Orange Mountain. The Macnaughtans' new house is to be most attractive. There is a living room thirty by twenty feet, with a big open fireplace. Below this is a billiard room of almost the same size. The southern porch, which is so large it is a room in itself, extends the length of the house. It is enclosed in glass, and is steamheated for the Winter, and commands the splendid view. Mrs. Macnaughtan seemed so happy and absorbed in the farm, the horses, and the imported Jersey cattle that I hesitated to bring her down to Myra Kelly and her work.

The first thing of course I wanted to know was, had she ever seen any of the little children of the east side since she gave up teaching there, to which she replied:

"Yes indeed, I often go back to the school, and not long ago I wrote a letter to Morris Moglewsky. I told him where I was living, but did not on that occasion ask him to visit me. He no sooner, however, received my note than he started out to find me. He came straight across the city from the east side to the North River, and took the first ferryboat he came to that took him to the Jersey side. Then he proceeded by trolley. He started at 10 in the morning and got to my house at 5 in the afternoon. His first words of greeting were: 'Teacher, I spent all my money.'"

"Does Morris know that he figures in your stories?"

"No. He inquired if I were teaching, and I told him that I was not, but that instead I was writing. His face lighted up at that. I had sent him a typewritten letter, and he exclaimed: 'I noticed you wrote fine.'"

"Your last story does not deal with the east side. Does that mean that you are going to give up writing those stories?" I next asked.

"Not necessarily," she replied, "but to keep it up I have to go back and gather more material constantly. My critics are rather puzzling in their attitude. If I do only east side stories they say it is because I can't do anything else, and then when I try something else they say I have run out of east side material. My new book, "The Isle of Dreams," is a departure. It is a romance of grown people, but of course there are children all through it."

"How did you come to write that story?" I started to ask, but then I stopped, for I realized that the hero in both appearance and manner so resembled her husband that there could be no doubt of the reason why. I suggested as much to her, and she protested, but I am sure I am right.

Myra Kelly's method of work is original and interesting. First she dashes on her characters, and puts down on separate slips of paper a description of them. Then she works out the stories and lets she developed also. As the heroes "charming manners" are in a hotel in Venice the story she turns to the slip of paper which bears his description and reads over "charming manners," and soon realizes her made the hero complete.

I think Myra Kelly's husband is as much interested as is she in her stories, and he and his secretary correct all the proofs for her and relieve her of that drudgery.

"Have you a new long story under way?" I inquired.

"Hardly yet," she said, "at least not to talk about. I have had a plot in my mind for a long time, but the story is to be laid in Ireland, where I was born, and I am going to wait until I go over there before I write it."

"Do you expect to go soon?"

"My husband and I are thinking of going in August for two or three months."

Mr. Macnaughtan owns 600 acres in Oldchester, and as we were driving out we passed a little old farmhouse by the side of the road that belongs to his land.

"Do you see that house?" said Myra Kelly. "Well, we have had the funniest time with the people who are there. They moved in one night without any comment. They have never paid any rent, and several times we have asked them to go, but still they remain. We even went so far as to take down the barn as a gentle hint, but it had no effect. Then we removed the shed connected with the house, but still they stayed on. I suggest now that we remove the front porch and see what happens, or, better yet, as we intend to move the house across the road, to do so with the family in it. We started to dispossess them once, but we found they had a lot of little children, and we could not bear to do it."

When I came away I carried with me a vision of the polo pony that Myra Kelly rides. It can jump four and a half feet, a great stretch of open country, a big fireplace, where there was a cheery, crackling wood fire, gun racks, polo mallets, fishing rods, and hunting trophies, and Myra Kelly sitting at one side of the fire and her husband on the other, and I thought to myself it hardly seems fair to be so happy and famous too.

I HAD a letter from Clara E. Laughlin, whose new book, "Felicity," is causing so much comment. She is a resident of Chicago, and has been for some time on the staff of the Interior Magazine. She has written numerous stories, both short and long. I wrote and asked her to give me some material about her interesting self, to which she replied:

"There isn't anything interesting about me. I'm just a seasoned, hard-working individual, with pretty thorough experience in nearly every phase of the literary game. I have a beautiful time in the world, and am glad every day that I'm alive. My riches are chiefly in my friends and my home, which latter is a great rallying place for those dear, delightful folks who 'do things.'"

Her novel, "Felicity," is a story of a great actress, and of the work and suffering she goes through to gain her fame, and when I asked Miss Laughlin how she came to write the story, she replied:

"I have always been passionately interested in biography, letters, and memoirs, especially of artistically gifted persons. My wide reading in those lines and my wide acquaintance with living persons at that work, have given me a tremendous interest in the psychology of success; this interest has been evident in nearly everything I've done, but finds its fullest expression in "Felicity."

"The first thought of Felicity I had was that she was a woman to whom the world gave everything, but a woman who, by the very temperament that made her great, was doomed to a thousand sufferings that sturdier, denser, happier folk could not understand. We pay for everything in this world, and, of course, for nothing more heavily than for genius. I wanted to show how a woman of gentle sort pays, and pays. As I wanted the crucial element of immediate personal contact with her public, I saw that my woman was an actress, who must give her personal life for her art, and may not preserve them both, as a writer or painter or other artist may do. That is how the book came to 'go on the stage.'

"Another thing I wanted to show was the alienation of sympathy that success always causes. No one is so successful as he seems to us to be, but unless we can see the price he pays for his fame, the conditions on which he gets it and which bring him, in the average, pretty much to the level of our own enjoyments, we don't love him; we have first to be sorry for a person before we really love him."

Some of Miss Laughlin's reviewers have been distressed because she apparently made her "Felicity" self-pitying, and they went on to prove that it was not a pretty trait, and did not do for a heroine. When this arraignment was brought to Miss Laughlin's attention she said:

"Poor Felicity! The lonely self-pity of the too-successful is one of the traits which make the great all akin. And Felicity laughed at herself in her dear, whimsical way when she caught herself complaining that she was tired of her fame; she knew she was only half honest about it, even at the moment, and she liked herself for knowing it. However, I am very much flattered by these reproaches from my reviewers, for they show that Felicity is vital, and that is what I wanted. I didn't put Felicity in a book because I thought she was perfect, but because I thought she was human."

In answer to the question as to whether any of her characters were taken from life, Miss Laughlin writes: "I hope they all resemble a great many people, both on and off the stage, but not one of them is in any least degree sketched from a single living model. Some lay readers insist that the characters must have been 'really, truly' people because they seem so vividly alive, but this is because I have lived with those characters, waking and sleeping, for five years. They have been my life, everything I have read and seen and felt and thought, every new person I've met in the flesh, every place I've been, and experience I've had, has seemed to serve but one end, the further illumination of those personalities which were shaping the story of "Felicity." I have known those people "inside and out"; they could have no secrets from me, bluff me off with no false fronts. I've laughed with them, cried with them, and suffered with them until they have become closer inwoven with the warp and woof of my life than any of the flesh-and-blood creatures who were about me."

Miss Laughlin's story throughout is occupied with the stage and the stage folk. In one place the actor Vincent, who married Felicity, saves her life at the cost of his own. This incident is laid at the stage entrance, so that the theatre inevitably brings her own story to Miss Laughlin's mind whenever she attends it, and speaking of that she says:

"When I go to Power's Theatre here I see the play in a haze of unreality. What my real vision is concerned with is a ghostly dark stage—that same stage—and in a little booth-like dressing room on one side, the woman of the wondrous smile, stricken in that strangely mixed way, so that her deliverance was lost sight of in self-reproach and pity, and on the other side, in another little booth-like dressing room, the debonair gentleman—poor, weak, merry Vincent—who died so unhesitatingly, trying to do 'the decent thing.' I have so many times lived through the agony of that night that it seems like the vividest page out of my own life history."

MISS CLARA E. LAUGHLIN.

MISS NORAH DAVIS is a Southern woman. She was born in Huntsville, Ala. Her mother was English, and her father Welsh. She speaks of herself as a "penniless lass wi' a long pedigree." Every generation or so of the Davises produced a Norah, with a Celtic temperament, and Miss Davis has proved no exception to the rule. Speaking of it herself, she says:

"I was christened Norah and proceeded as promptly as I could to betray the cloven hoof of the Celtic temperament. I was registered the fool of the family, and turned over to my own devices, which probably accounts for my particularly happy childhood."

Miss Davis's childhood was spent in an old-fashioned Southern home, filled with her father's books, which were a constant source of delight to her. When asked about her childhood she said:

"I lived in a charming world of my own, and 'huilded with roofe of gold my beautiful castles in Spain.' Every book I took down from the wall opened a chink to its glories, for in those blissful days all was grist that came to my mill in the way of books. I had an unappeasable hunger for them, and I swallowed Smollett and Fielding without a wink, and Scott and Balzac and the chronicles of one—Froissart—nothing came amiss to me. I read all that came into the house, history, law, politics, down to the yellow-backed novels that my big brothers smuggled in for their private delectation—and no one said me nay. I had a perfectly phenomenal memory, and as I simply reveled in poetry, by the time I was 10 years old I could—and did—reel off pages of Milton and Tennyson, of Tasso's "Jerusalem" and "The Inferno." That was my delight. I knew all the 'shivery' part by heart, and used to frighten the other children after we were put to bed at night by saying it to them. I must have been an absurd little parrot, and the worst of it is, to this good day I cannot rid myself of the style I acquired in those days. If I am interested in anything I am sure to 'drop into poetry,' and when I am angry my language rivals Macaulay's.

"I wrote poetry long before I could spell correctly, and preserved correctly the rhythm of verse that I could not have understood. I certainly, do not understand it now. My younger sister and I invented a language that no one else could understand, but which we spoke with marvelous fluency. To my great sorrow I have entirely forgotten it now."

But this happy, joyous childhood came to an end when Miss Davis was 16, for her father died, and she had to take care of herself. Some friends got her a position to teach in one of the public schools of Huntsville. Speaking of that period of her life, she says:

"It seems to me now a very humorous thing to have done, but I took myself more seriously then, and did not hesitate to try to fit my square stick into the round hole that presented itself. I knew a lot of things out of books, it is true; but there are books and books, and what I knew was about as useful to the little minds I was supposed to stuff as a handful of shining pebbles would have been to their stomachs. But I held on, and the School Board put up with me for some reason, I never could think why, unless because the children loved me. But after a couple of years I had picked up a few of the things a teacher is supposed to know, and, what was more to the purpose, lost some of the things they are not desired to know, though I never could altogether rid myself of this latter inconvenience. For instance, I was teaching one time in a little town in Northwest Arkansas—the rawest place on earth. There was a red brick school building, all new and sticky, and a very 'important' School Board, and I had the honor to teach literature—good heavens!—to the sons and daughters of the river bottom planters. So one day in class one of the pupils called my attention to a reference to Lilith tucked away in a footnote and asked who Lilith was.

Now Lilith had always been a particular friend of mine, I admired her immensely, so I laid down the book and rather indiscreetly, perhaps, gave those country lads and girls a glowing description of her. That night, as might have been expected, it was told in fifty families in the little town that Miss Davis had said that Adam had a wife before Eve, that he was a widower when Eve snapped him up! I was duly summoned before the board to explain the libel I had started upon Adam to twelve orthodox and scandalized farmers, all solemnly bent upon probing Adam's matrimonial matters to the bottom. In my desperation and to clear myself of malicious libel, I cited the Talmud, which only made matters worse, and I was politely requested to take myself and my heresies and schisms back to Alabama, for the State of Arkansas would brook no 'such.'"

Miss Davis found teaching, as may be imagined, dull work, and after a short time she gave it up and took up instead stenographic work in the courts, and also newspaper writing. While so engaged she made her way all over the South from Key West to the Ozark Mountains, and lived in all the States along the way. She got keen pleasure out of these experiences and says of them:

"The world is a good place if a woman knows how to take it. It treats her well enough. The memory of those days when I knocked about, a small soldier of fortune, living by my wits, is full of pleasure. I had achieved without knowing it all the rights that my emancipated sex has been striving for so long and so eloquently. My life was my own and the world was my oyster—what more is there?"

It was the work she did in the courts that she liked the best; the drama of life there appealed to her irresistibly. After a little bit she was offered an appointment as clerk attached to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, which was stationed at Birmingham, and she accepted it. It was then, she maintains, her education began, and she says:

"My work threw me with men from whom I learned an incredible amount of things—lawyers and Judges and experts of all sorts. I got to see life as it looke to the eyes of men who are in it, to have a knowledge of good and evil, not got out of books; to look on, close by, at the wrestlers in the arena, and by and by, before I knew it, I, too, was a wrestler. Men do not own their ideas, but their ideas own them and force them into the arena to fight for them, and so it came about I wrote 'The Northerner.'"

Miss Davis's answer to the question whether she ever had any intention of making literature her profession was as follows:

"I do not remember that I ever had any literary ambition. I wrote because I had something to say uenally, and the newspapers paid me to say it, and when I found myself committed to 'The Northerner' I was very much surprised. But the story clamored to be told. There had been a lynching here of particularly atrocious aspect, and the lynchers were tried in the Federal Court, where I was a clerk. I did not have time to write a book, did not know if I could, in fact, but there was no escape for me. The story would be told. So I got a month's leave from my office and wrote in twenty-eight days the version that stands in print to-day. I made no draft, simply sat at the typewriter and wrote and wrote! I put in fifteen hours a day.

"And so this last book, 'The World's Warrant,' grew. I hadn't any idea of writing that sort of book; I had the outline of another book in my head and several chapters written, when this began to take shape in my head, growing from a bit of real life that I had chanced upon, an atom of experience merely. I find that I cannot write from an imaginary premise; if I have a foothold in fact, no matter how narrow, I can rear all sorts of castles in Spain upon it, and shore them up with logical arguments, too, but it must have that narrow basis in fact; even if no one would suspect it but myself, I must know it. The fact acts somewhat as a hypnotic suggestion, I suppose, upon which my subjectivity works. Also I find that once the plot is laid and the characters begin to draw the breath of life, they take things into their own hands. The immutable laws of character grip them, and within the circle of their mimic stage it is not what I say, but what the logical outgrowth of their own characters dictate, that goes at last into print.

"In the vanity of my 'literary aspirations' I had worked out quite a different ending for 'The World's Warrant,' as well as a different name, but it was no use. The characters quietly and firmly put me aside and worked out their own destinies to suit themselves. I was merely a spectator—their amanuensis, in fact."

ROMANTICISM.

THIS volume is the tenth in the series of monographs upon "Periods of European Literature," edited by Prof. Saintsbury. It is unusual to find so large an amount of important literary history and of sound literary criticism within the compass of a book which may be read within a comparatively short time. In few instances does the modern tendency to specialization more fully commend itself than in such treatises as the present. Even the most cursory perusal of a work so convincingly adequate must leave definite impressions upon the mind. In his first chapter the author treats of the rise and progress of the Romantic Revolt against classicism in Great Britain, where that great intellectual awakening had its birth. He introduces us to the precursors of the movement, Thomson, Gray, Goldsmith, and Collins, and he then proceeds to their followers, poets, dramatists, novelists, philosophers, and orators, no less than thirty-seven of whom he gives an account. The reviews of Cowper, Coleridge, and Wordsworth are particularly suggestive. In this chapter of 165 pages we have a masterly abstract of English literature during a period covering the last quarter of the eighteenth century and the first few years of the nineteenth, and however familiar one may be with the subject, it is impossible to read these clear summaries and sane judgments without gaining a sense of mental stimulus and refreshment. The second chapter takes us to Germany, and here the author somewhat changes his method, and concentrates his attention on Lessing, Herder, Kant, Schiller, and Goethe, having little to say of the host of minor writers; although he makes passing mention of Richter, Novalis, the Schlegels, and a few others. To give even the barest synopsis of this chapter would far exceed our limits. In his third chapter, treating of the romantic movement in France and Italy, the author returns to the method pursued in the first chapter, a large number of writers being criticised. As to the fourth chapter, tracing the history of romanticism in other lands, the author expressly says that it was intended for nothing more than a sketch, and he trusts that it may be judged accordingly. Spain, the Netherlands, the Slav countries, Scandanavia, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia are considered in this final chapter. The words of Matthew Arnold, chosen as a motto for the series, have an especial aptitude for this particular volume: "The criticism which alone can much help us for the future is a criticism which regards Europe as being, for intellectual and spiritual purposes, one great confederation, bound to a joint action and working to a common result."

Mrs. Wharton in French.

Mrs. Wharton's novel "The House of Mirth" has been translated into French, and will be produced serially in the Figaro—the daily paper, and not the Figaro Illustré—beginning early this month. The title is translated as "La Demeure d. Liesse," although in the article by Th Bentzon (Mme. Blanc) which appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and discussed both "The House of Mirth" and "Mme. de Treymes," the title was translated as "Maison de la Fête."

A Boy's Story.

Messrs Harper & Brothers have issued this week a boy's story, one that will interest adult readers as well, by Hamlin Garland. It is entitled "The Long Trail," and in it Mr. Garland has drawn from his own experiences in the late 80s to tell the story of a boy who goes over the long Telegraph Trail to the Klondike.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu.

An addition to Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons' Memoir Series in May will be "Lady Mary Wortley Montagu and Her Times," by George Paston. Lady Montagu was an English lady of the eighteenth century, who was distinguished by her beauty, her eccentricities, and her wit. Her biographer has used many unpublished letters and Jonathan Richardson's portrait of her.

Mrs. A. E. H.—Can you tell me where I can procure a four-volume edition of the Bible, not the Frowde Oxford edition? The Frowde edition is published on India paper, and for constant use I prefer a thicker paper. I have searched the largest book stores and publishing houses, but failing to replace the one I found in 1896, (burned in the San Francisco fire,) I appeal to you as a last resort.

Four-volume editions of the Bible, exclusive of the Frowde Oxford edition, hars besn published recently by Revell, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York; N. D. A visit to ths old book stores of this city would result probably in the finding of a satisfactory second-band four-volume edition of ths book sought.

THOMAS.—Is there any edition of the old miracle and mystery plays published with the matter in modern English?

The Macmillan Company publishes, at $1.90, "English Miracle Plays, Moralities, and Interludes," edited by Alfred W. Pollard. The Shakespearean Society publications include "Chester Plays: Mysteries," edited by T. Wright; "Coventry Mysteries," edited by J. O. Halliewell, and "Digby Mysteries," edited by Dr. J. F. Furnivall.

E. P.—Some time ago there was advertised a cheap edition of the old book, "The Household of Sir Thomas More." Please let me know price and publisher.

"The Household of Sir Thomas More," by Anne Manning, (Mrs. Rathbone,) is published by Dodd, Mead & Co., 372 Fifth Avenue, at $1. There is also an edition published by Herder & Co. of St. Louis at 90 cents.

NORTH ADAMS.—Will you kindly give a list of good, French Canadian dialect stories? Short stories, suitable for recitations, &c., are especially desired.

"Pierre and His People," by Sir Gilbert Parker, published by the Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York, contains a number of such stories.

Mrs. F. AKRON.—Will you kindly cite me some books or articles dealing with the subject, "Where and how do the family names of the people originate"?

"English Surnames," by C. W. Bardsley. Charles Scribner's Sons; "Our Names," by Mrs. Sarah M. Burnham, Bradley & Co., Boston; "Names and Their Meaning," Mrs. D. P. Sanford, E. P. Dutton & Co.; "Names and Their Meaning," L. Wagner, Georgs P. Putnam's Sons; "British Family Names: Their Origin and Meaning," H. Barber, Charles Scribner's Sons, are some of ths books that you would find useful in your study.

I. C.—I have a fairly well preserved copy of The Ulster County Gazette, printed Jan. 4, 1800. It is in mourning for George Washington. Who would be interested in it, and has it any value? If so, what?

If your copy is genuine it is rare and of value, but there are many reprints of the paper which closely resembls ths original, and it is only an expert who could on examination of the paper in your possession decide the question.

S. BROWN—Will you kindly inform me what books, aside from Rollin's History, are considered the best authorities on the history of Carthage, by whom they are publisbed, and if possible, the prices?

"Carthage and Her Remains," by N. Davis, Harper & Brothers, $4; "Carthage and the Carthaginians," by R. B. Smith, Longmans, Green & Co., $1.25; "Hannibal and the Carthaginians," by Jacob Abbott, Harper & Brothers, 50 cents; "Carthage and Punis," by D. Sinden, two volumes, G. W. Jacobs & Co., Philadelphia, $6; "Carthage," by A. J. Church, George P. Putnam's Sons, $1.50; "Carthage of the Phoenicians," by Mabel Moore, E. P. Dutton & Co., $1.50, would doubtless answer your inquiry.

ALEX. FRANCIS—Will you kindly inform me, if possible, where I can obtain a poem entitled "Evolution," by Langdon Smith?

The poem was published in The Scrap-Book for April, 1906.

Answers from Readers.

H. B. L.—Your reply to the queries of "M. C. L." under date of March 24, gives some interesting information regarding Magna Charta. It is possible, however, to be quite definite as to the number of original versions in existence. The British Museum contains two versions. There is a third original under the custody of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln Cathedral. A fourth exists in the archives of the cathedral at Salisbury. So far as is known to day there are no other originals of the Great Charter in existence. No one of these four takes precedence of the others. Any one of these four charters may have been actually on the famous field at Runnymede. The royal seal is affixed to three of the versions those at Salisbury, at Lincoln, and on one of the two in the British Museum. There is no trace of any seal on the other of the versions in the museum, but there is no reason which lends doubt of its originality. All are of course manuscript versions, the only kind there could be before the art of printing came in. In explanation of the number it is generally agreed that the men who exacted the Charter from John insisted that the great seal should be appended to many copies practically identical and of equal authority. These versions were distributed through England, preserved in the various episcopalic and among the archives of the chapters of cathedral churches. Four have survived the wear and tear of time. For one who cares to know the curious history of these old manuscripts, there is no better place to find it briefly set forth than in W. S. McKechnie's recent volume, entitled "Magna Charta: A Commentary on the Great Charta of King John. With an Historical Introduction." (Glasgow, 1905: James Maclehose & Sons.)

H. T. GILBERT—In your issue of March 16, "L. A. W." asks concerning "Graciosa and Percinet." This is one of the fairy tales of the Countess d'Aulnoy. A collection of Mme. d'Aulnoy's fairy tales, translated from the French by Anne Thackeray Ritchie, was published by Lawrence & Bullen of London in 1892. This tale is also to be found in a collection called "Household Tales," published by Routledge, and quite popular with English children a generation ago.

R. E. K.—The lines quoted by "J. E. C." (March 23) should read:

"Talk not of genius baffled. Genius is master of man;
Genius does what it must, and talent does what it can.
Blot out my name, that the spirits of Shakespeare and Milton and Burns
Look not down on the praises of fools with a pity my soul yet spurns."

These lines are from a poem entitled "Last Words," by Owen Meredith, (Robert, Lord Lytton,) and can be found in any complete edition of his poetical works under the head of "Minor Poems," generally the last in the list.

CLEVELAND.—In answer to the appeal of Maud Lee, I would say that the poem entitled "The Bell of Zanora," beginning:

"The ruddy sun was setting
Behind the Western hills;
The fields were warmed to splendor

was written by William R. Rose, associate editor of The Cleveland Plain Dealer. The verses were printed in "Our Continent," the short-lived periodical founded by Albion W. Tourgee. It can also be found in No. 12 of "The Best Selections" in the series of the Penn Publishing Company of Philadelphia.

LEWIS D. BURDICK.—The lines "Ah, eloquence, thou wast undone," &c., for which "Subscriber" asks, are from an "Ode to Eloquence," by Henry Carey, and may be found in Sanders's High School Reader of 1856. It may also be found in Porter's Rhetorical Reader. He was also the author of "The African's Lament," beginning:

"Far from home and all its pleasures,

P. A. P.—As to the poem "There Is a Garden In Her Face," about which "C. W. T." inquires, it may interest him to know that it is printed in the "Bibelot" for 1895, which is made up of selections from the poems of Thomas Campion. Reference is made in the introduction to A. H. Bullen's collection of Campion's poems, (privately printed in 1889,) but there is nothing said as to the disputed authorship of the poem.

It can also be found in "Old English Love Songs," edited by Hamilton Wright Mabie.

CHARLES W. FLINT.—The poem desired by S. L. Koziell in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS of March 30, is probably "The Inchcape Rock," by Robert Southey, two stanzas of which end "And blessed the Abbot of Aberbrothock" and "Won't bless the Abbot of Aberbrotbock," while a third ends with "And I'll plague the Abbot of Aberbrothock."

The poem, which is entitled "The Inchcape Rock," is by Robert Southey. Besides appearing in any good edition of his poems it can be found in "Dana's Household Book of Poetry" and in ths "World's Best Poetry," Volume V., Page 431. We are greatly indebted to many of our readers for information in relation to this poem.

Appeals to Readers.

Capt. H. D. SMITH.—Missing in bis "Field Book of the War of 1812" makes use of the following lines. Can you inform me from what poem they were taken?

"Clear ship for action!" sounds the boatswain's call,
"Clear ship for action!" his three mimics bawl.
Swift round the decks see war's dread weapons
And floating ruins strew the watery world.
"All hands to quarters!" fore and aft resounds,
Thrills from the fife, and from the drumbead bounds.

ANNA T. BYINGTON.—Some fifty or sixty years ago, in an old book in the attic, I was interested in some verses describing the life of the idle rich, beginning:

"There was a youth, but woe is me,
I quite forget his name, and he,
Without some label round his neck
Is like one pea among a peck."

I should like to see the whole of it again. I think it may have been by Jane Taylor. Can any of your readers tell me the author, and where I could find it?

J. M. PARKER.—What is the last verse of the popular song Rosina Vokes used to sing, "My Heart Was True to Poll"? Some of your readers would give it, I am sure. I remember all but the last verse. It was all very funny.

R. L.—Some years ago I read a story the title of which I have forgotten, but the gist of it was that a party of young college men advanced the theory that women were not necessary as housekeepers, to the comfort of mankind, and that the men felt themselves fully equal to the task of conducting the affairs of a household without the help of any of the gentler sex. The sister of one of them, at whose house they were staying, announced her intention of going away for a visit, with the condition that the said young men should assume the care of the house during her absence. Their experiences in the matter are related in the story. Can any one tell me the title of the story, and where it may be obtained?

GUSTAV G. LANSING—I wish to find a poem, each verse ending

I heard it recited in the early '90s by Major Carroll, a well-known war correspondent of The New York Herald. I think the Major was connected with the Treasury Department at the time of his death. He said the verses were clipped from an old newspaper found at Pittsburg Landing. I can recall the stately calm of the rhythm, in complete harmony with the Major's baritone voice.

H. E. G.—Please tell me where I can find the following quotations:

"Pleading for whatsoever touches life with upward impulse,
Be He in where else, God is in all that elevates and lifts,
In all that humbles, sweetens, and consoles."

"Next to goodness is the power
Of seeing where true goodness lies"

OUT DOORS IN SCOTLAND.

FROM FOX'S EARTH TO MOUNTAIN TARN.—Days Among the Wild Animals of Scotland. By J. H. Crawford. With 16 Illustrations. Pp., 271. 8vo, cloth. New York: John Lane Company.

AGAIN the Old Country gives us one of the glimpses of herself of which we never tire. This time the way lies from Fox's Earth to Mountain Tarn, and a pleasant part it is, and something to cause many men of many minds to linger by the way. It is a book to hold upon the knees before the log fire in Winter and let the wood smoke blend its colors with those of the various animals and scenes that pass across the pages—lowland and hill fox, wildcat, marten and polecat below, the eagle and falcon above, or to read in the open with the first breath of Spring to the nostrils mingling with the salt breath of the Northern Isles, then a run down Tweed, and the sport of salmon and trout. Golf links and wild life blended, with the August beauty of Scotland, for, as Mr. Crawford prefaces, "this book is a contribution to the natural history of Scotland." It tells of days among the wild creatures; days selected from many days, because more crowded with incident, against a picturesque background. It starts from the earth of a lowland fox, and ends by a lonely mountain tarn. It ranges from the border to Shetland, from burn to river, from shaded lane to fenceless moor and bare mountain top. Trout and salmon, singing-bird to eagle, field mouse to deer—all find place.

The current ripples, the rings break out on the pools; in the twilight the voles come forth from their tunnels. The rod flashes its silvered line; the bay of the hound, the crack of the gun, echo through its pages. It is confined to the north. Scotland is, perhaps, the only part of the British Isles where the term wild life has much meaning. M. O. W.

Voyage of the Dewey.

An account that promises to be highly entertaining of one of the most unique voyages on record will be given in the next issue of Scribner's Magazine. It is that of the dry dock "Dewey" from this country to Manila, and the writing and illustrating will be done by W. J. Aylward, who went the whole way on the transport that towed the dry dock. Mr. Aylward was a member of Howard Pyle's select art school at Wilmington, Del., some three or four years ago, and has since gained a reputation by his illustrations of marine subjects for which he has shown a natural instinct.

Lippincott Books.

The J. B. Lippincott Company published this week "The Truth About the Case," a book of true detective adventure, written by M. Goren, ex-Chief of the Paris detective police. The same house has in preparation for early publication a book explanatory of the card game of "skat," which grows in favor. It is written by A. Elizabeth Wager-Smith, who has a high standing among whist players. The author has endeavored to present this game, which is rather involved and difficult, in a clear and popular manner.

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Capt. John S. Barnes Writes of Lincoln—Chambers's New Novel Out Next Week.

A NOTEWORTHY contribution to the literature of Lincoln and associated with him during the last days of the civil war is the group of important figures to be published in the May and June numbers of Appleton's Magazine. The author is Capt. John S. Barnes, who was brought into peculiarly intimate association with the President when assigned as his escort and charged with his safety during the President's and Mrs. Lincoln's visit to Richmond immediately after its surrender. The articles, entitled, "From Washington to Richmond with Lincoln in 1865," will be illustrated by reproductions of many valuable old photographs and engravings.

Robert W. Chambers's novel, "The Tree of Heaven," (Appleton,) will be published Wednesday of next week. In this novel Mr. Chambers has dealt largely with the occult sciencee of the East.

Frederick Trevor Hill's "The Trial of the Chicago Anarchists" will appear in the next number of Harper's Magazine. The same number will have an article by Capt. Mahan on the navy during the civil war. A crucial days preceding the civil war. A welcome art feature will be the reproduction of many of the works of John W. Alexander, including his decorations for the new Carnegie Institute of Pittsburg.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons issue to-day the following previously announced books: "Military Memoirs of a Confederate," by Gen. E. P. Alexander; "The Pickwick Ladie, and Other Collectore' Stories," by Winfield Scott Moody, and "Short Cruises," by W. W. Jacobs.

Next week the Macmillan Company will add to their English Men of Letters Series a volume on "Shakespeare," by Prof. Walter Raleigh of Oxford. The date of issue is April 23, the day on which Shakespeare was born and died—which coincidence has caused it to be said that he must have been a quick worker.

Previously announced publications from the Macmillans that have appeared this week are Zangwill's "Ghetto Comedies," "A Book of Vegetables," by Allen French, giving the time of planting of the useful vegetables of this clime; "The Reform Movement in Judaism," by David Philipson, D. D., a promiffent rabbi of Cincinnati, and "The Spirit of American Government," by Dr. J. Allen Smith of the University of Washington. The last is issued as a number of the "Citizens' Library," edited by Prof. Ely.

Harper's Weekly for to-day contains an article on Alla Nazimova, by H. J. Forman, and an appreciation of Fielding, by C. H. Gaines.

With the idea of helping readers digest the many facts being brought out about Christian Science, and of adding to the knowledge of its philosophy and the history of its development, the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, of Northampton, Mass., has written for Messrs. Putnam "Christian Science: Its Relation to Philosophy, Science, and Religion." This book is based upon a pamphlet, privately printed by Mr. Powell, which came to be in demand, although it was not regularly put upon the market.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. issue to-day "Our Sister Beatrice," by Grace Grier; "The Trust Movement in British Industry," by Henry W. Macrosty, and "The Natal Rebellion of 1906," by Walter Bosman.

Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. have for immediate publication "The Disciple of a Saint," by Miss Vida D. Scudder. Miss Scudder edited the "Letters of St. Catherine of Siena," which was well received, and she has now written an intimate romance of St. Catherine's time. Her effort has been to show something of the inner and spiritual realities of a period dear to romance, but usually studied for the sake of its external picturesqueness only.

The publication by the John Lane Company of A. C. Fox-Davies's detective story, "The Dangerville Inheritance," was postponed until this week, because the first edition of it was exhausted by orders received before they had time to put the book on the market.

The Broadway Publishing Company, 835 Broadway, N. Y., will have ready about April 20 "William McKinley: A Biographical Study," by A. Elwood Corning. The book will contain fifteen striking illustrations and an "introductory address" by President Roosevelt as a preface.

The publication date of Commander Peary's "Nearest the Pole" was postponed from April 15 to April 23 to allow for the insertion of some additional matter. Its publishers, Messrs. Doubleday, Page & Co., announce for the same date "Water Wonders," by Mrs. Jean M. Thompson, who deals here with the formation of snow and ice crystals. Advance orders for Grace Thompson Seton's forthcoming book, "Nimrod's Wife," have been so large that the first edition has had to be doubled. An English order has been received for 5,000 copies.

Arthur Train, author of the McAllister stories, has contributed to the May number of the American Magazine an article on the Patrick case. At the time of Patrick's trial Mr. Train was, as he is now, Assistant District Attorney. He has written not only a narrative of the famous case, but has made a careful psychological study of the man Patrick.

"The Clansman," Thomas C. Dixon's novel, is to be translated into Arabic.

The author of "Carmichael," Miss May Wilson, who signs herself "Anison North," is a native of Ontario. Although "Carmichael" is her first novel, Miss Wilson has done magazine writing, and she is at present en editor of a Canadian magazine.

The World's Work is having an interesting aftermath to the article in its April issue on "the dog's life" of the United States soldier. A great number of letters have been received at the office—heartfelt commendations from enlisted men and deserters, and refutations from the army officers. Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston has written a short criticism of the matter of the article, and this will be printed in the May issue of the magazine under the title "Army Life and Discipline."

Gov. Hughes, the man and the executive, will be studied by Dr. W. H. P. Faunce and "Q. P." respectively in the next issue of The World's Work.

McClure, Phillips & Co. will publish next week the following books: "The Siamese Cat," by Henry Milner Rideout; "The Smiths," by Keble Howard; "The Trimmed Lamp, and Other Stories of the Four Million," by O. Henry; "The Master of Stair," by Marjorie Bowen; "His Courtship," by Helen R. Martin, (a second printing already ordered;) "Through Portugal," with thirty-two illustrations in color, by Martin Hume, and "A Night at Avignon," by Cale Young Rice.

Hannah Whitall Smith, whose "Christian's Secret of a Happy Life" has attained a circulation of about 250,000 copies, has, since the appearance of that book, written several others, but none which has obtained a popularity like that of the first. Her last book, "Living in the Sunshine," (Revells,) bids fair to repeat the success of the first, for while it has been out only a short time, it is already approaching the end of a third edition. It is worth noting that the general theme of the two successful books is pretty much the same. Either Mrs. Smith is at her best on this subject or else it is one that is particularly interesting.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. issue to-day their previously announced "Making a Newspaper," by John L. Given. Their publication of "Alice for Short" is delayed because the proofs are being read by the author in Florence. After the close of the Peace Congress Messrs. Holt will issue a book entitled "As the Hague Ordains; Journal of a Russian Prisoner's Wife in Japan." The author of this book does not disclose his name.

The Smith Professorship at Harvard University, which has been vacant since the passing of Longfellow and Lowell, has again been filled by the appointment of Prof. J. D. M. Ford, author on the Romance Languages. Prof. Ford is now writing a volume on "The Novel" for "Types of English Literature Series," edited by Prof. William Allen Neilson.

James Gillet, at one time Bret Harte's mining partner and the original of that author's "Truthful James," died at his home in Sonora, Cal., last week.

Kate Douglas Wiggin's "New Chronicles of Rebecca," which is published in America this week by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., will be brought out in Great Britain by Archibald Constable & Co., Limited; in Germany, by Tauchnitz, and in Sweden, by Bannier.

A NEW LANDOR MS.

A WELCOME surprise comes as we learn that Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons are to issue by the middle of next month a hitherto unpublished work of Walter Savage Landor's—a study of the life and character of the statesman Charles James Fox. The book was printed in 1812, but suppressed, and the manuscript and all but one copy of the book were destroyed. On the flyleaf of that one copy the following was written and signed by Richard M. Milnes:

I believe this volume to be unique. Mr. Landor told me he was aware of the existence of no other copy. The whole edition was wasted, with the exception of this copy, which the author gave to Mr. Southey.

The work is a commentary on John Bernard Trotter's "Memoirs of the Latter Years of the Right Honorable Charles James Fox." Landor's opening sentence is: "Mr. Fox bore about him, until he advanced in years, all the characteristics of an age the most corrupt and profligate." A glance at the advance pages indicates a book of Landor's usual charm.

Ready Next Week.

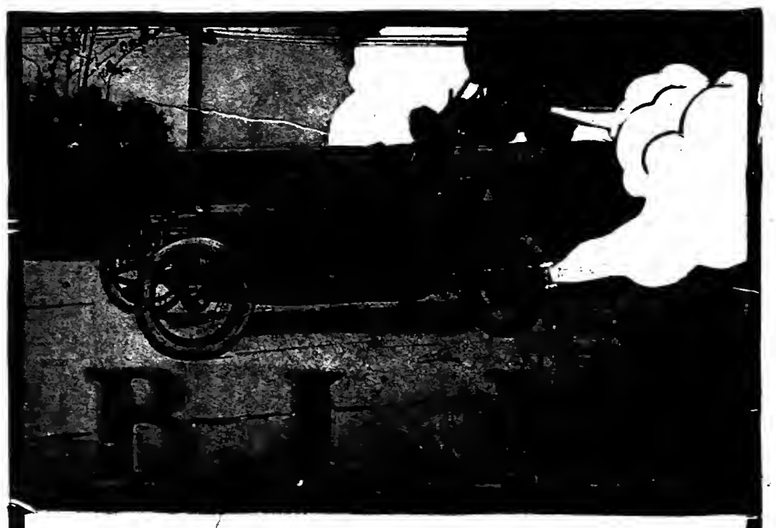
A GLANCE at a copy of The Sunday Edition of The New York Times will show what an excellent medium it affords for reaching the people who have the discriminating ability to know the best and the means with which to buy the best.

The New York Times
"All the News That's Fit to Print."



IN several instances, men of middle age, of high position and of much conservatism have come to us and said:—

"I have been much attracted by the B. L. M. It seems to be exactly what I want, but you speak of it as a RACING CAR. I DON'T WANT a racing car. I don't want people to consider me as a man who would drive a racing car. I want the best runabout I can buy, and the B. L. M. seems to be just what I have been looking for—except for the racing part of it."

WE replied that the great qualities which make a racer of the B. L. M. are so much more than mere speed, so much beyond its mile-a-minuteness, that we do not consider speed when we term it a racing car. We mean that all its principles of construction, all the perfection of detail in the finish of its parts are those which are embodied in those great racing machines on which manufacturers stake their reputations. This speed, this ability to withstand a terrific strain, this combination of strength with lightness makes for so great a cost that the manufacturer cannot possibly afford to put out a touring car or a runabout to compare with the speed marvel which represents him in events such as the Vanderbilt Cup Race. You do find these qualities in the B. L. M. at $3,500. When we had explained these points the gentleman in question purchased B. L. M. cars.

THE B. L. M. is designed and constructed for one purpose only; to give you all the endurance, lasting value, perfection of construction and perfect efficiency at all times of a racing car, which it resembles in every way save in point of size. It has the added advantage of being practically unskidable. One can fly around corners at a very great speed without danger of upsetting or skidding; its centre of gravity is such, its suspension so perfect, that it is the safest car you can use for any purpose. You don't have to break records with it unless you want to.

B. L. M. MOTOR CAR CO., 29 West 42d Street, N. Y.

and how the ELMORE eliminates it.

DO YOU want to be the chap who must scrape together the four cycle pay-roll? Do you want to be OBLIGED to hire a chauffeur, or do you want to run your own car? The Elmore has a two-cycle engine you know; it does away with all valves, it eliminates one hundred and seventy parts that the other American cars, the four-cycle engine cars, MUST have. The Elmore engine is so simple that Elmore owners do not DREAM of having chauffeurs. They get the real good fun out of motoring; they manage their own cars. If you have a four-cycle car you DO NEED a chauffeur, and you need to keep him busy tinkering at the car, too. Item No. 1 on the pay-roll.

THE two-cycle engine gives a forward impulse at EVERY stroke of the piston—result, no pounding, no racking, no jerking, constantly to put out of adjustment and to wear out delicate parts. The Elmore engine has no delicate parts; it runs from one end of the year to the other on a cost of up-keep that falls away below $10 for the entire year, as scores of letters in our office from Elmore owners will show you. The four-cycle engine gives a forward impulse with only EVERY OTHER stroke of the piston; there is a sharp forward jerk, a constant succession of racking, straining plunges instead of the smooth, easy, strainless glide of the Elmore. These constant shocks rack every part of the car, and that is why the four-cycle cars begin to deteriorate FROM ALMOST the FIRST MOMENT you put them in use. Result, big and constant repair bills to keep the poor four-cycle engine going. Item No. 2 in the pay-roll.

THE tire man is a pretty nice sort of chap, and he has to live; but do YOU want to be the one to pay his rent and buy his cigars? The Elmore, with its constant forward impulse at EVERY stroke of the piston, its light weight by elimination of dozens of useless parts, saves tire cost in a fashion which no other car can equal. The four-cycle engine with jerks, its irregular advances, the added and USELESS weight, makes tire troubles INEVITABLE. It JAMS the tire against the point of contact, causing an unequal pressure which is more destructive than hundreds of miles of road. The Elmore owners frequently go through an entire season of hard use, thousands of miles of touring, on ONE set of tires. The four-cycle engine—well, ask ANY owner of ANY car other than the Elmore what his tire bill is; then set that amount down as Item No. 3 on the pay-roll. Do you want to furnish the pay-roll?

35 H. P. 4-Cylinder Elmore. Price $2,500.

There is only one way to appreciate the advantages of the Elmore simplicity. Come in and try it. We will show you all the speed you can use; more power than you can use; a freedom from motoring troubles of all sorts and a car that has NO up-keep expense attached to it. The Elmore at $1,750 or $2,500 is a far better car in every way than many cars selling at from $4,000 to $5,000. Come in and we will SHOW you that this is so.

Matheson

THE reason why so many of our Men of Affairs purchase Mathesons rather than imported cars is not because of the difference in price.

It is because they find in the Matheson all the great qualities of the best foreign cars, and something more—the Matheson dependability on American roads under all conditions. They seek the great speed, the mighty power, the unrelaxing endurance, the unfailing reliability, the entire freedom from road troubles that the Matheson gives.

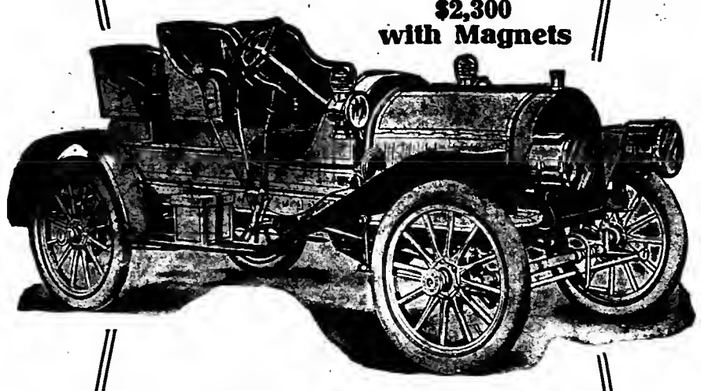
THE SNAPPY MILE-A-MINUTE MORA RACYTYPE

The Mora 24 H. P. Racytypes with the pan support for engine and transmission will maintain a higher speed for a longer period at an economy of power, fuel, oil and tires that cannot be even approached by cars whose alignment is subject to variation.

$2,300 with Magnets



The Mora Racytype, rated at 24 H. P., stands as a bright exception to the general run of speed cars in that, owing to its improved construction and light weight it does not require an overpowered motor and an overweighted chassis. Cars whose motor and mechanism are suspended from the frame as individual parts demand a higher powered motor to overcome the loss caused by variation from alignment, a feature that is prevented by the Mora Pan Support.

The Mora Pan support is a metal pan that extends from crank to gear case, to which is bolted the entire driving mechanism. Motor and gears are bolted to this support, which is bolted to the frame as a single unit. There is no working loose of any part of the Mora construction, there is no vibration to rack and deteriorate the car, but a steady, even torque that makes every fractional horse power help drive the car.

GREATER NEW YORK AGENTS,
110th Street and Broadway

BETWEEN the cheap, low-powered cars and the expensive high-powered foreign touring palaces there has existed a gap, a demand for a medium-priced, medium-powered touring car, whose puachase was within the reach of the average man, and whose cost of up-keep was within the average income.

THE CADILLAC, MODEL G, at $2,000, was designed for and DOES fill that gap. With the experience gained from making over 17,000 cars during the past five years. and with the largest automobile factory in America, it devolved upon the CADILLAC COMPANY to produce the car that the average man could afford to own—a car so thoroughly well made that the cost of maintenance would be practically nil.

THE CADILLAC, MODEL G.

is roomy, speedy, silent and economical.

With average care it will last as long as the highest-priced car made, and it will give all the enjoyment and exhilaration that any car offers, no matter what its price.

If you contemplate the purchase of any car, you ought first to know the CADILLAC, Model G. It will post you on what you ought to expect in a motor car, and unless your tastes are unusually extravagant, in many cases it will be just the car you want.

The CADILLAC, Model G., is made with a four cylinder 20 h. p. silent motor, sliding gear transmission, ring type governor and all the mechanical improvements found in the highest priced cars. It has all the speed the higher priced cars dare use, with a throttle control that gives the driver full command over the car at all times.

ROOSEVELT HAS NOT CONSULTED HUGHES

Governor Not Informed About the Ostensible Plan to Support Him.

DOUBTERS IN WASHINGTON

They Wonder Why the President's Efforts Are Restricted to Wadsworth's District.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 20.—It was stated on excellent authority to-day that Gov. Hughes was not consulted about President Roosevelt's removal of Archie A. Sanders as Collector for the Port of Rochester, and knew nothing about it until it was announced to the public.

It was further stated that nothing has thus far been said to the Governor about the appointment of a successor to Sanders.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—President Roosevelt's action in taking a hand in the New York State fight, ostensibly to support Gov. Hughes, has aroused a good deal of interest here. There is a disposition to wait and see whether the President really does anything outside of Wadsworth's district. So far he has confined his efforts in Gov. Hughes's behalf entirely to that part of the State.

There are many persons here who are inclined to regard the story of the President's support of Hughes by means of Federal patronage as an afterthought. The persons who hold this view say, and have excellent authority for saying, that President Roosevelt has never communicated to Gov. Hughes his intention to aid him by the use of patronage or in any other way. They doubt whether the President's attack on Wadsworth's officeholders would ever have been explained in that way if it had not been for the suddenness and vigor of Wadsworth's onslaught on the President in his statement the other day.

Wadsworth is an enemy of the President, and other Congressmen are not. This affords an explanation in the minds of the President's enemies for his action in Wadsworth's former district and inaction elsewhere. His friends are waiting eagerly for demonstrations in other districts.

By those who take the White House statement at its face value and do not ascribe the President's action to personal enmity, it is believed that the Administration intends from now on to build up a strong organization in New York, aided by such strength as Gov. Hughes can bring to it. This organization, it is said, will be for the purpose of bringing about harmony in the Republican Party in the State—a harmony which will exclude any followers ex-Gov. Odell may have left.

The President, it is declared, has been trying for two years to get harmony and a strong organization in New York. He tried it first with Gov. Higgins, who was to be the new leader. Speaker Wadsworth was picked by the White House and jammed into the Speakership in pursuance of this scheme. Higgins, however, was altogether too much of a lightweight to become a great leader, and the President found himself in danger of factionalizing the party instead of harmonizing it. He accordingly drew out. Now, with a strong man in the Governor's chair, he sees his chance. He hopes to end the factional differences in his native State and form an organization which will be able to stand up without wabbling when a campaign comes along.

This, it is understood, was what he said to Henry W. Taft, the Secretary's brother, the other day, and it is believed that he then gave Mr. Taft the assurance which has been repeated since, that his support of Gov. Hughes related to State matters and not National matters. In other words, the President's preference for his successor is Secretary Taft, and there is reason to believe that he hopes this strong organization which he desires to see built up will vote for Taft in the National convention.

The resignation of Archie D. Sanders, Collector of Internal Revenue for Rochester, was received in Washington this afternoon. Mr. Sanders's resignation had been asked for by the President. It was stated at the White House that the name of his successor would not be announced until the return of Secretary Cortelyou to Washington.

Some of the friends of John A. Merritt, Collector of Customs at Niagara Falls, are said to be worried for fear that he will go the way of Sanders. It is said that Wadsworth got the Merritt appointment, and that therefore Merritt's head is in danger. There is no foundaion for this, so far as can be learned. Merritt has not taken any offensive part in politics, and besides he was appointed for a four-year term. Officially he is credited to Senator Platt rather than to Wadsworth.

BUFFALO, April 20.—That the Erie County Republican will be dragged into the trouble between the President and ex-Representative James W. Wadsworth, is evident from statements made here to-day. There is a badly mixed condition, but William C. Warren, who was deposed as leader by Edward H. Butler, is jubilant over the chance of his political rehabilitation.

Warren was Odell's chief lieutenant in this section of the State. Butler joined forces with Gov. Higgins, got the Federal patronage, and became the boss. President Roosevelt has been recognizing Butler in making apointments, but Gov. Hughes seems to be recognizing Warren.

The signs here now point to a change of base by the President. Butler was not informed of Sanders's decapitation until it was over, and he has not been consulted about Sanders's successor. Warren opposed Wadsworth's re-election, and Butler favored it.

"I don't believe that President Roosevelt is in alliance with the Governor or Republican leaders in this matter," said Mr. Butler to-day. "I have no idea what his reasons may have been in demanding Mr. Sanders's resignation, but I do know that when he does anything of that kind he has reasons of his own. It certainly does not prove that he is trying to help Mr. Hughes, although it may be that he agrees with the Governor. He is not the man to adopt any political or factional methods in making appointments."

When William C. Warren was told of Mr. Butler's statementa he laughed and said:

"Butler will do well to get in touch with Washington. I am inclined to regard the President's action as a veering toward Hughes as a Presidential possibility in 1908. Every prominent man with whom I talked in New York during a recent visit regards Hughes as the coming man. He certainly will be a strong factor in the next Republican National Convention."

The Federal officeholders in Buffalo are opposed to Hughes and the Governor has refused to favor them in making appointments.

SENATE TABLES RESOLUTION.

ST. PAUL, April 20.—The Senate laid on the table to-day the House resolution, passed about ten days ago, indorsing President Roosevelt in his recent controversy with E. H. Harriman.

The vote to lay on the table was 37 to 10.

CLAIMS WEALTH; TRIES TO DIE

Man Who Says He Is Son of Mrs. Wurts-Dundas Arrested in England.

LONDON, April 20.—A. F. S. Dundas, who says he is a son of the late Mrs. Anna M. Wurts-Dundas of Philadelphia and rightful heir to millions of dollars, stood in the prisoners' dock at Reading to-day, charged with breaking into a private dwelling with the intsntion of committing suicide.

The caretaker of the house found a note protruding from the door. It was signed by Dundae and said he was ill as the result of not being able to find employment, that for days he had been without food, and that he had locked himself up with the intention of anding his life.

The police were called and broke open the door. They found that Dundas had heen trying to hang himself with his suspenders and necktie, but had failed to take his life.

When taken before a Magistrate, who ordered that he be held for further inquiries, Dundas said that the Orphans' Court at Philadelphia had decided against his claim, hut that he had appealed to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20.—Arthur Fitzroy Somsrset asserted that he was a son of the late Mrs. Wurts-Dundas and the rightful heir of the Wurts-Dundas fortune. He still uses the nams of Dundas, despite the action of the courts in this city in deciding against hie claim. When hs was an infant hs was left in care of a nurse, and afterward suffered years of poverty.

He first came into public view by declaring that he was a son of Mre. Anna Maria Wurts-Dundas, a daught of Mrs. Joshua Lippincott, owner of the Yellow Mansion, which stood at Broad and Walnut Streets. He sought upon this ground to estahlish his right to share the inheritance held by Ralph Wurts-Dundas, who was always rscognized as the only living son of Mrs. Wurts-Dundas.

Anna Maria Dundas was a beautiful and talented girl, and among the many suitors for her hand was Major William Wurts, whom shs married in 1869. Soon after the marriage the husband adopted the family name of his wife, and they went to live in Parie. When the Franco-Prussian war began they went to Brussels. While they were there Ralph Wurts-Dundas was born.

NOT THE MARVIN BOY.

Gloversville Police Satisfied That They Have Made a Mistake.

Special to The New York Times.

GLOVERSVILLE, April 20.—A dispatch received here to-night from Catskill has pretty well satisfied the police that they are dealing with a case of mistaken identity in the man and boy whom they have been holding in the belief that they were Horace Marvin of Dover, Del., and his kidnapper. According to thie dispatch, the man, who is known as Alexander H. Allen, was living in Catekill with his wife and the boy who bears euch a striking resemblance to the Marvin boy on March 4 last, the date on which the child disappeared.

The couple with the child arrived in Catskill on Jan. 15, the dispatch says, and went to board with Mrs. James Black. They remained there until March 20. Allen is a peddler and has declared all along that the boy is his own son and was born in Logan, Ohio. An effort has been made by the police here to verify this statement, but as yet they have been unahle to get into communication with the authorities at Logan. According to Allen, the boy will be 5 years old in June.

Before the arrival of the Catskill dispatch to-day Allen and his wife were put through a searching examination by the police. Both appeared undisturbed by the severe questioning, and despite the efforts of the police to ahake them their stories tailied. It now appears certain that the boy is not the missing Marvin child, but the police wil detain the man and boy until Myles Standish, brother-in-law of Dr. Horace Marvin, the father of the lost boy, can reach here. A telegram was received to-night from Standish, saying that he would arrive here from Boston about midnight.

Sbould Standish declare positively, however, that the child is not Horace Marvin, Allen will be held anyway. Chief Smith of the local police received a telegram from Chief Bates of Catskill to-night asking that Allen be held pending the arrival of an officer and a warrant. According to the Catskill police, Allen left that place without paying his board bill.

Allen is locked up here, while the child and the woman are under police guard at a boarding house. The youngster is apparently pleased with the excitement which he has been causing and prattles continually. He has proudly told the police that he has no mamma, but that he has a brother "Shonnie."

It was upon these statements of the child that the police here based their strongest hopes of having the right persons. Tha Marvin boy's mother is dead, and he has a brother named John.

ROBBED OF PAYROLL CASH.

Frank Schrenk, the Superintendent of the Schrenk Glass Worke, was robbed in a hall at the factory in Clinton Street, Hoboken, N. J., yesterday. Mr. Schrenk had gone to the bank and drawn the money necessary for the pay roll, amounting to about $1,000. With the money in a satchel he returned to the factory. While passing through a dark passage leading to his office he was struck on the head and fell. Mr. Schrenk did not loee consciousness, but called loudly for help. Hia assailant then delivered another blow, and, seizing the bag, ran for the street.

Some of the employes who had heard the cries, started in pursuit, and when they reached the street a large crowd took up the chase. After running two blocks the man jumped on a paesing wsgon. Pulling a revolver from his pocket, he forced the driver to whip up his horse, soon eluding his pursuers. In the excitement no one took the name of the owner of the wagon, but the police feel certain that they will capture the man. It is believed that the thief wae either a discharged employe or some one who had been informed respecting the usual time of Mr. Schrenk's arrival with the money on Saturdays.

LIGHTS BURN LOW IN THEATRE BELT

GAS NEEDED FOR A WHILE

Firemen Not Allowed to Play Hose on the Burning Dynamo—Damage in Doubt.

The explosion of a big turbine dynamo in the Edison power house at Thirty-eighth Street and First Avenus just after 9 o'clock last evening caused a panic near the power station, the eending in of a fire alarm, and a dimming of lights in the vast district which is eupplied with light by the station.

In the White Light District, in the theatre district, and in that part of the town where night is turned into day, the explosion caused all the electric lights to flicker as though they were going out, and then sink into a dull-red glow.

In many restaurants candles or gas had to be used, and in ths Herald Square, the Circle, the Caeino, and other theatres the lighting became so bad that the gas had to be lit all over the house. This condition lasted until about 11 o'clock, when they switched on more power by the use of reserve dynamos, and the lights again flared up.

About 9:15 o'clock thers was a report like the diecharge of a cannon in the power house, and immediately blue and red flames filled the interior of the building. This was followsd hy a hurst of steam and dense smoke from every window. Policeman Doyle was standing just across the etreet, and sent in a fire alarm.

There are factory huildings around the power house, but beyond them and in the side streets are rows of tenements. With the noise of the explosion every tenement began to give up tenants, and within two minutes ths street in all directions was blocked with the crowd. Many had friends or relatives working in the building, and a report was spread that seventeen men had heen injured and at ieast five killed. The excitement then was great. In the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station the reserves were held in readiness and a Sergeant was sent out with instructions to telephone for help as soon as the result was known.

The power house is a vast open buliding. The floors are constructed as balconies, and there is no obstruction from roof to main floor. The cause of the explosion ie known to those in charge, but they rafused to tell it last night. The dynamo is a circular affair twenty-five feet high and about twenty feet around. It is inclosed in a eteel casing, and this held firm and prevented serious damage. As it was, the interior is pretty well wrecked and some thousands of feet of wire which it contained were burned clear of insulation.

When the firemen arrived flames were shooting from this dynamo and mounting to ths roof. The power had been shut off, and it was explained by those in charge that there was not the slightest danger, and that all they could do was to let the thing burn out.

Not a stream was played upon it and hours after the explosion, when the flames had disappeared, it presented the appearance of a vast steaming kettle, with the lid broken.

Just at the height of the excitement there waa a second and smaller explosion in the power house. A cylinder in Engine No. 5 blew out and some quick work had to be done to shut it down. This accident, it was said, was the result of the shaking of the machinery by the blowing up of the dynamo.

The police put the damage at $5,000, but it is probable that this is only a guess. The dynamo was a new one, and was put in at great cost. According to some of the men in the place, the damage cannot be estimated until the machinery gets cold and an examination can be made.

The blowing up of the dynamo and the accident to the cylinder caused much anxiety to those who work among ths whirling mass of machinery. It waa said that the greatest care and attention had to be given to the machinery on account of the extra strain put on the other part of the plant to keep the lights going at all.

With the exception of a few hotels, a theatre or two, and several of the big office buildings, which ara lighted by their own plants, the explosion in the Edison plant affected practically every place of amusement, most of the restaurants, and many of the hotels in the central part of the city.

In these places the lighte were so dim as to cause much comment and speculation, people wondering what it was that had caused the lights to burn so dimly. Nobody knew what the matter was, and even those who guessed that the trouble was in the Edison plant were unable to prove their theories, owing to their inability to get the plant by telephone.

At the Broadway, Casino, Empire, and other theatres whose lights are furnished by the Edison Company the managers feared that the lights would not last until the end of tha performances. Brown's Chop House was at one time in semi-darkness, but there was an emergency supply of oandies on hand ready to be lighted the moment the electrical lights failed. This was true of other reetaurants and those of the hotels supplied by the Edison Company.

Conspicuous among the big hotels lighted by private plants was the Hotel Knickerbocker. The lights on top of that structure burned like suns when their intensity was compared to those that flickered in front of the theatres near by.

The big Anna Held sign in front of the Broadway Theatre, around which a string of green lights has another string of red ones, was perhaps as dim-looking affair as any on Broadway, unless it was the big electric hcn of the Casino.

The dimness of the electric lights was noted by everybody, but among all the thousands probably few persons had any idea of the cause. A little before 11 o'clock the lights came back with full power and from thon on there was no more trouble, and Broadway was once more "the Great White Way."

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

PARIS, April 20.—Mabelle Gilman, the American actress who, it is reported, will soon wed W. E. Corey of the United States Steel Corporation, met with an accident on Thursday while riding in the grounds of hsr château at Massey-Verrières, about fifteen miles from Paris. She has been living in a bungalow near the château while the latter is undergoing a process of renovation and decoration, which, it was arranged, should be completed by the end of this month. The château stands in its own grounde, which are very extensive and well wooded and contain two lakes.

NURSE'S DEVOTION FATAL.

Dies from Scarlet Fever Contracted in Vassar Hospital.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., April 20.—Miss Lucy Von Hogel, a nurse at Vassar Hospital, died yesterday of scarlet fever contracted while attending a stranger who was taken sick on the streets of Poughkeepsie. When Miss Von Hogel was stricken, Miss Faithful Butler, a student at St. Faith's, who is preparing for a nurse, went to Vassar Hospital to attend her. She in turn contracted the disease, and is now seriously ill in an isolated ward. The man is still alive.

About a fortnight ago the stranger was received. He was at first believed to have typhoid fever, but in a few days t developed into scarlet fever. The Trustees of ths hospital asked the health authorities of the city to open ths pesthouee at the City Home to receive him and employ a man nurse to attend to him there. Some friction ensued between the health authorities and the Trustees of the hospital, and, as the man could not be set out in the street, he was isolated from the other patients and Miss Von Hogel, who had volunteered to nurss him, was quarantined with ths patient.

Mrs. Von Hogel, a widow of New York, was summoned when the serious condition of her daughter was observed. The quarantine pavilion ie isolated from the main hospital group, and the greatest concession that could be made under the health rules to the mother wae to permit her to stand by a window and look through at the sufferer within.

Entrance was effected to the house through a window in the rear. The robbers went to the dining room, where they threw things about in examining the silverware. They left the plated ware on tha floor.

A sloop wns seen hanging around the dock in front of the house all the afternoon. Two drawers from the bureau which contained the silver knives and forks were found lying on the shore.

RAILROAD GETS STEVENS.

Former Panama Canal Engineer to Value a Big Eastern Line.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—John F. Stevens, former Chief Engineer and Chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, is to be employed by one of the large Eastern Railroad Companies to make a physical valuation of its property. Mr. Stevens declined to-night to name the railroad, but admitted the fact. He expected to enter upon his new duties about May 1.

He called at the White House to-day. His visit was a personal one, he said, as he had not seen the President since his return to this country. He talked with the President about ths condition of affairs on the Isthmus.

"How long will it take to compete the canal?" Mr. Stevens was asked.

"Between six and seven years," he replied.

Mr. Stevens was asked if he would say anything about Mr. Oliver, whose bid to do the work by contract was rejected. He replied that he did not know Mr. Oliver.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20.—Officials of the Pennsylvania and the Reading Railroad to-night professed ignorance of the plane of John F. Stevens, and gave the impression that he was not to join their forces.

STUDENT DROWNS IN COLUMBIA TANK

HAD SAID HE COULD SWIM

Classmates Give Clue When Brothers Visit the University in Search of Missing Boy.

The body of William Sandler of 76 Orchard Street, who was a second-ysar student in the Schools of Applied Science at Columbia, was found at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the bottom of the swimming pool of the university.

Sandler did not return home on Friday night, and his two brothers wsnt to Morningside Heights early yesterday morning to inquire after him. The fact that on Saturday a great part of the student body does not havs to attend lectures was responsible for considerable delay in finding out anything about the missing student.

In the afternoon some one suggested going to the gymnasium authorities. As a result of this, Sandler's gymnasium locker was searched and his clothing found.

Just about thie time H. G. Guiteras and C. H. Howe, members of Sandler's class, appeared. Howe told the gymnasium instructor he feared Sandler had drowned in the swimming tank. Guiteras and Howe wers the last to see Sandler alive. He had gone to the gymnasium on Friday after a class session, and the two students saw him in the tank. On going away they asked him if he was all right and could swim, and he said he could.

While going on a trip with the class yesterday to collect geological specimens some one told ahout Sandler's brothers inquiring after him. They remembered the circumstances of seeing him the day before, and asked permission to return to the university and search the tank. This was granted.

On hearing their story the gymnasium authorities gave orders that the swimming pool be drained. When considerable water had been drawn off the body was discernible from the diving tower. An attendant dived for it and brought it to the surface.

Meantime Coroner Harburger arrived with Coroners' Physician Lehane. Dr. George L. Meyian, head of ths gymnasium department, showed him the reoords in which Sandler's general condition was described as up to the average, but Dr. Meyian added that he was convincsd that the boy must have been overcome by a fit of weakness while in the water. The Coroner at first wished an autopsy to be performed, as he said he thought there might have been hazing involved, but a superficial examination showed no marks of any kind, and the temperature of the water was found to be 74 degrees, or normal. As a result Coronsr Harburger granted permission for the hody to be taken home.

This is the first drowning accident in the Columbia pool. The authorities say a force of three men are in charge of it besides a swimming instructor, George Holm. In the future, however, care will be taken that some attendant is present every moment that the pool is in use. The tank is one of the largest in the country. It is on the lowest floor of the gymnasium building, is semi-circular in ahape, and measures 100 feet by 50. The depth starts at about four feet and goes to about fourteen.

President Butler was greatly shocked when he heard of the accident. He sent a telegram to the boy's father saying: "Am shocked and deeply grieved at death of your son. Accept assurance of profoundest sympathy of entire university."

Inspector Sweeney of the Harlem District has assigned Detectives Walsh and Newman to investigate the case, and Coroner Harburger will subpoena a number of college authorities to testify when he holds his inquest later in the week.

YALE STUDENTS IN PERIL.

Two Are Capsized in a Racing Sloop—Rescued by the Dexter.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, April 20.—J. McH. Rauers and Glenn Stewart, respectively a senior and a junior in the scientific department at Yale University, narrowly escaped death by drowning in the lower harbor this morning, their rescue being due to quick work by the officers and men of the United States revenue cutter Samuel Dexter, Capt. James L. Sill. The young men were sailing in a racing sloop and were capsized.

Both students live at 124 Prospect Street, New Haven. Rauers's home is in Savannah, Ga., and Stewart lives in Pittsburg, Penn. They came here to get the sloop, the Petrel, a twenty-footer, to take her down to New Haven to participate in the college races which are held there weekly.

This is the second experience that Rauers has had with Capt. Sill of the Dexter. In 1898 Capt. Sill was on a Southern station, off the Carolinas, when the terrific gale of that year drove many vessels ashore. Rauers was then taken on board Capt. Sill's boat, and an acquaintance was formed. The acquaintance was renewed to-day under similar circumstances.

RUNAWAY COUPLE CAUGHT.

Chicago Contractor Says His Daughter Fled Here with a Married Man.

After she had refused to go home with him, J. T. Bransfield, a well-known railroad contractor of Chicago, had his stepdaughter, Ella Bransfield, 26 years old, arrested here on a charge of grand larceny last night. The young woman was locked up at Police Headquarters, as was J. F. Busiger, a printer, of Chicago, with whom Branefield alleges his daughter eloped from his Chicago home on April 9. According to Bransfield and George A. Fuller, a Pinkerton detective of Chicago, Busiger is a married man with two children. He is living apart from his wife, but was compelled to pay her $4 a week by the Chicago courts.

Bransfield told the police that on April 9 he gave his daughter $500 to deposit in a bank. He alleges that ehe did not deposit the money and instead eloped with Buelger.

Busiger was held on the charge of being a suspicious person.

BIG FIRE IN OYSTER BAY.

Opera House Burned and Post Office and Stores Damaged.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., April 21.—Long's Opera House on South Street was destroyed by fire early this morning. It was finished only a few months ago, and cost $20,000. It would seat 1,300 persons.

A performance was given in the theatre last night, the play being "Driven from Home." It was owned by James L. Long, former Town Clerk, of Oyster Bay and at one time clerk of the Nassau County Board of Supervisors. The origin of the fire is not known. Thers was a scarcity of water and ths fire department, consisting of ons engins company and a hose company could maks no headway against the flames.

Ths opera house was a wooden structure, and the fire ate its way through the building with great rapidity.

The flames spread to Rice's grocery store, Lunam'a building, the Prenowitz Block, Hewlett's two cottages, and the Post Office, all of which were more or less damaged by fire and water. The firemen were hampered by a lack of hose and the villagers turned out with buckets and kept wetting down as well as they could the buildings in the vicinity of ths blaze.

At 2 A. M. tha Post Office, a brick building, costing $9,000 was on fire but a great effort was heing made to save it from destruction.

MORE EARTHQUAKES.

Several Shocks in Portugal—Another in Constantinople.

LISBON, April 20.—Several earth shocks were recorded to-day in various sections of Portugal.

The damage done was slight.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 20.—Another earth shock was felt here and in the suburbs at 4 o'clock this morning.

THOUGHT IT AN EARTHQUAKE.

Many persons in the neighborhood of Forty-fifth Street and Broadway last night thought Manhattan had heen shaken by an earthquake, until they icarned that the troubls was caused by the explosion of a manhole in front of the Hotel Astor. A geyser of steaming hot water was sent high into the air when the explosion occurred. A few persons were spattered with hot water, but no one was injured.

Just what caused the explosion is not known. Both coverings were blown from the manhole, which was over electric wires. The inner air-tight plate was shattered. Ths large plate flew several feet into the air and rolled into the gutter. The explosion was terrific and frightened persons several blocks away.

"EXTRA" AT ALL HOURS.

No Big News Either, Just Fakes in the Papers—West Side Rebels.

Ths hawking of fake "extras" through the streets by newsboys overzealous in stimulating trade has called forth loud complaints from citizens in the quiet residential streets of the west side in the last few days.

A man in upper Broadway last night bought one of these alleged "extras," and, finding it only the regular night edition, with big headlines built on nothing, remonstrated. But the newsboy gleefully pocketed the penny and in response to the remonstrances heaped abuse upon the purchaser.

Still worse is the annoyance caused away from Broadway before breakfast or after bedtime. The hoarse cries of the newshoys reach the deafest ears, and measures are being discussed for stopping the ill-timed cries.

ITALIANS IN KNIFE DUEL.

One Kills His Assailant and Is Held on Charge of Murder.

Francis Vetti, a young Italian of 354 Cornelia Street, Williamsburg, was held for murder without bail yesterday in the Lee Avenue Court. He was accused of having stabbed and instantly killed Bruno Cordova of 344 Linden Street early yesterday morning after a quarrel in a saloon.

Cordova left the place and awaited Vetti's appearance, and when the latter came out Cordova rushed upon him with a knife. Before he could use the knife Vetti whipped out a stiletto and thrust it into Cordova's abdomen, the man toppling over dead.

MUST GO TO TRIAL.

Westchester Traction Co. Ordered Into Court to Defend Franchise.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 20.—The village of Ossining won a partial victory over the old Westchester Traction Company to-day when Justice Tompkins of the Supreme Court ordered the action brought hy the Attorney General to annul the franchise to trial next Saturday. The village authorities have been trying to get the case to trial for several years.

Justice Tompkine also dismissed the application of the company for an injunction against F. A. Stratton of the Hudson River and Eastern Traction Company, a rival corporation, to prevent him from tearing up its tracks and laying new ones for his company.

FRICK'S HOME IN NEW YORK.

His Friends Do Not Believe That He Wants to be a Senator.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 20.—H. C. Frick came to Pittsburg yesterday on private business and slipped out again to-day for New York without discussing his threatened campaign for Boies Penrose's seat in the United States Senate.

"Mr. Frick says he will not see any newspaper men. He is leaving for his home in New York on the 10 o'clock train, and has a lot of business to finish,' said his secretary this morning.

If the reports that Mr. Frick wants to become a United States Senator from Pennsylvania are true, the statement of his secretary that his home is in New York is significant.

Business associates of Mr. Frick in this city do not take much stock in his reported ambition. They believe that Mr. Frick is too much interested in his business affairs to bother with politics.

THREAT FOR BINGHAM, BUT CHANGES GO ON

Four New Captains Named Despite Threat of Violence from Somebody.

BINGHAM LAUGHS AT IT

He May Adopt the Paris System of Masking Detectives When Crooks Are Arraigned.

Commissioner Bingham yesterday made four new Captains out of Lieutenants who had just blossomed from Sergeants, transferred two old Captains, and told about "hearing" of a threat to do him physical injury because of the big shake-up of Friday. He and Second Deputy Bugher worked hard all day long, and it was confidently predicted that they were preparing for a further and more general shake-up this week.

The Commissioner would not tell any details ahout the threat against him. The Captains created were needed to fill four vacancies, and the eligible list left little choice for Commissioner Bingham. Everybody knew that Lieut. James McCafferty, who was placed in charge of the Detective Bureau on Friday night to fill the place of the exiled and reduced McLaughlin, would be made yesterday. It was a logical step, and besides that McCafferty stood second on the eligible list from ths Civil Service Commission.

Cornelius Leary, attached to the Detective Bureau as a Lieutenant, had to be made a Captain because he was a war veteran. He was sent to command the sub-precinct at Rockaway Beach, where there was a vacancy. He was appointed a patrolman in 1871 and a Detective Sergeant thirty years later.

War Veteran Promoted.

Another war veteran whose promotion to a Captaincy was necessary was Lieut. Patrick H. Bowes of the Greenpoint Avenue Station, in Brooklyn. He was brought over to command the Eldridge Street Station, whose Captain, T. H. Mannion, died several days ago. Bowes was made a patrolman in 1881 and a Sergeant in 1895.

The fourth promotion, however, was a little bit of a surprise. The wise men at Headquarters had not predicted him. The highest man on the eligible list was Lieut. Linden of ths Detective Bureau, but he was passed by for Lieut. Thomas W. Walsh of the Bureau of Repairs and Supplies. The latter was promoted to be a Captain and sent to take charge of the Bronx Park Station. He was appointed a patrolman in 1891, a Roundsman in 1896, and a Sergeant in 1901.

To make room for Walsh at Bronx Park Capt. James McGlynn was brought down to the City Hall Station, out of which Capt. John Farrell was moved to the College Point Station, in Brooklyn.

When Commissioner Bingham arrived at 300 Mulberry Street yesterday morning he had to cut a passageway through the dense gloom that was in the corridors, but he managed to do it somehow. He told the newspaper men that he would make four Captains during the day. While the reporters were pressing him for some reasons why he had made some of the changes of Friday, he remarked that he had heard that a threat of physical violence had been made against him because of the shake-up of the day before.

"Did the threat come from any of the eight men who were reduced?" he was asked.

"Nothing to say."

"Did the threat come by mail?"

"Nothing to eay. I have told you all there is to it."

Bingham Laughs at Threat.

Then he laughed, slapping his knee.

Asked if he meant any fling at Brooklyn Borough by reducing six of her Inspectors at one fell swoop, he answered in the negative.

"There is no special knock at Brooklyn," he went on. "It just happened that way. There were special reasons for each case. I thought that these men ought to be put down. It is not that they were villians or anything like that. Some men are only negatively good. They just sit and sit and sit. To other men it seems wiser to administer a little discipline now and then. Conditions will be better in Brooklyn now than they have been in the past."

Asked if he had heard that neither Capt. Cross nor McClusky had reported at their respective precincts on Friday night, and if it were true would he prefer charges against them, the Commissioner said he could not tell what he would do. The story was not true, at least as to McClusky, who appeared promptly at his precinct. The Commissioner was pressed to say whether McClusky's appointment in the Tenderloin was a soothing letdown or a plan to get him into hot water," and he had nothing to say.

He did say, however, that the charges which were said some time ago to he pending against Inspectors Walsh and Hussey, who were not reduced, had not been dropped "yet." The transfer to the Detective Bureau of Lieut. Denis Grady was pointed out to the Commissioner by an interviewer as an incongruity, because, it was argued, Grady had been Devery's right-hand man in the Detective Bureau, but was shipped out to do precinct duty when the reform Commissioner, Partridge, was brought in.

"If mistakes have been made," answered Commissioner Bingham, "they can be corrected."

Commissioner Wants Real Work.

Asked about the transfer of Lieuts. Funston and Day from the Detective Bureau, the Commissioner said he thought he would let Funston do something else besides the grand entourage act with the Prince of Prussin. "We do not want men who are merely gentlemen in the bureau," he explained. The Commissioner said that he was not worrying so much about the morals of the men as about the work that they were doing. He said he would go down into the Detective Bureau and help in the reorganization work down there.

It has been the custom every morning to march out the crooks arrested the night before and the detectives, lining both classes up for mutual scrutiny. Of course, at the same time the crooks were becoming equally well acquainted with all the men New York had in its Detective Bureau.

It is the French rule to have the detectives put on masks before they face the crooks. "I would introduce the masks at once," said Commissioner Bingham yesterday, "if I did not suspect that the newspapers would poke fun at something which I consider would be a splendid thing for the bureau. I think I shall do it anyhow."

McCafferty, the new head of the Detective Bureau, was one of the earliest men down to the House of Despond yesterday morning. He lined his men up, of course, and made a little speech. He said he didn't know whether he would be there a day, a month, or a year, but he would see that every man under him got a square deal, and that no man should rob another of credit for work done. That has often been the case in the bureau. It has been particularly the thing for Central Office men to take a prisoner that had been arrested by some humble plain clothes man attached to a precinct.

Among the men who were paraded for scrutiny were three alleged burglers. "They are the sort of fellows I want brought in," he told his men. "I don't want mere 'stand-ups'—men who will be discharged just as soon as they get to court; I want the real thing."

McCafferty Not a Talker.

McCafferty—now Captain, if you please—said he had been ordered by the Commissioner to cut out long-winded speeches to newspaper men. He started in by cutting out everything.

If there were any rasping noises in New York yesterday audible above the rumble and roar that the urban poets speak of it was the eight Inspectors ripping off black velvet from their coats. If there were sounds like the stampeding of cattle that the Western poets talk about, it was the Lieutenants sent out from the Detective Bureau Black Friday to do precinct work scurrying around to get uniforms somewhere.

Nothing developed yesterday to make any more certain the probability that some of the deposed Inspectors will fight the new police bill on the ground of constitutionality. Lawyers Grant & Rouss, who say they have been approached by some of the Inspectors, both present and erstwhile, to find out their rights under the law, said that "most likely" the men who intended to fight would wait a day or so before making any move. Some of the Inspectors who most expected deposition did not get it. But there is no telling what may happen. Both Bingham and Bugher have said that the devastation of Black Friday was but a beginning.

No one of the eight reduced Inspectors had asked for retirement up to last night, it was stated at Police Headquarters. There has been some argument as to whether the Inspectors reduced to Captains would get the pension of Captains or Inspectors should they go out. They could get the inspector's pension, it was stated yesterday.

Deposed Inspectors Have Hopes.

It was remarked that Commissioner Bingham was very disappointed that some of the fallen eight hadn't asked for retirement, as six of them can get out now on Inspector's pensions if they want to. The customary Inspector, unless he is very old or debilitated, looks on the action of a Commissioner about like this:

"Go ahead, old man. Cut up things while you can. I have seen many of your predecessors kicked out before me. They have passed out; I have stayed in. I am up to-day; down to-morrow; up the next day. That's the game. I have played it a good many years, and have made something out of it. I shall continue in the game, watching Commissioners come and go, taking my chances for the upturn of the wheel."

A question that was debated about Headquarters yesterday was this: Will the Captains that have been made Inspectors be eligible for membership in the Inspectors' Association, a good part of which was reduced Friday? Or will the feeling be so bad between them and the men who have been deposed that they can't get in? If so, will the new Inspectors get up a little association of their own?

HIS WIFE AT GIMBEL'S SIDE.

Attending Her Husband in Hoboken—His Health Has Long Been Poor.

The condition of Benedict Gimbel of Philadelphia, who attempted suicide in the Palace Hotel, Hoboken, was said at St. Mary's Hospital late last night to have improved somewhat during the day.

Besides the regular hospital physicians, there is now in attendance on the wounded man a Philadelphia physician, who was brought here by members of Mr. Gimbel's family. Mrs. Gimbel and two brothers were also in constant attendance. Technically, Benedict Gimbel is under arrest, a charge of attempted suicide having been made against him by the Hoboken police. Should he recover he will have to be arraigned on this charge before being brought to this city.

The wounded man's wife spent the whole of yesterday at his side, and will remain with him until he recovers. Isaac Gimbel of Philadelphia, and Charles Gimbel of Milwaukee, brothers, are also with him. The latter said last night:

"Benedict Gimbel is resting quietly and is progressing well. It is expected that he will recover within a reasonable time. His brothers and all the immediate members of his family are with him. The physicians in attendance recommend that he take a long rest, which, they say, with proper medical attention, should result in the restoration of his health."

Mr. Gimbel attributed his brother's act to the fact that his health had greatly run down, and that he was probably in a despondent state of mind. He said that the family physician had been closely observing his brother's mental condition for three months. Benedict, in fact, having only been able to attend to business at intervals owing to the condition of his health. A vacation had been suggested, but this he had refused to take.

Last night the doctors at the hospital gave out a statement to the effect that the general outlook for their patient was good and that all indications pointed to his ultimate recovery, though they did not care to say yet that he was entirely out of danger.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Leslie M. Shaw, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, had a long talk with President Roosevelt today.

Mr. Shaw declined to discuss what the talk was about, but did say that it covered a "wide range of subjects." It is known that politics and finance were among them. Mr. Shaw will return to New York to-morrow.

STRIKES MAY TIE UP 18 STEAMSHIP LINES

Demand for Increase Ignored First, Second, and Third Officers Resign.

ALL ON COASTWISE LINES

Men Will Quit May 1 If Wages Don't Go Up—Several Hundred Affected.

The first general strike of ships officers on the coastwise lines sailing from the Port of New York was ordered yesterday under the direction of the Executive Committee of Harbor No. 1 of New York of the American Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots, to go into effect on May 1. The strike, which is to enforce the demands of the first, second and third officers for the wages of $100, $80, and $60 a month, respectively, will affect the following lines, eighteen in number: Panama, Morgan, Old Dominion, Savannah, Clyde, Porto Rico, Brunswick, Ward, Merchants and Miners', Metropolitan, Red D, Mallory, Guffey Oil Company, Bull, American and Hawaiian, Standard Oil Company, Atlantic Coast Lumber Company, and Lukenbach lines. Several hundred men will be affected.

The officers have Federal licenses and therefore could not leave their posts without due notice without violating the Federal laws. In order to keep within the law the notice of the strike was given to the General Managers of all eighteen companies in the form of a notification of the resignations of the officers to go into effect on May 1.

Managers Ignore Demands.

The demends were submitted last Monday to the General Managers of the companies in the form of a petition, in which the petitioners asked for a conference between the companies' representatives and Luther B. Dow, General Manager of the association, as representative of the men. Since then the union has received no word from the companies.

Each of the General Managers received yesterday the following letter from Capt. Dow as representative of the men, accompanied by the individual signatures of the officers:

Dear Sir: On April 15 I sent by special messenger to you a request from your first, second, and third officers for an increase in salary, together with my letter of explanation. Both the letter and petition plainly said that this matter was placed entirely in my hands, and I respectfully requested a conference with you. As I have failed to hear from you—not even an acknowledgment of this letter—I now tender you the inclosed resignations. I do this without any malice, simply stating to you that it is impossible for the men to provide for their families as they should under the present wages paid them. As you have absolutely ignored this request, I have no option but to tender their resignations under their instructions, which should be accepted on or before May 1, but if their ships are not in port at that time they will certainly stay by them until they arrive at their home ports.

I wish to express my sincere regret at being obliged to take this step, but your ignoring completely my request compels me to do so.

Respectfully, LUTHER B. DOW,
General Manager.

The companies so far, with the exception of the Merchants' and Miners' Steamship Company of Baltimore, have been making no open preparations at least for a strike. The immediate effect of the strike, as well as interfering with the shipping of general cargo, will interfere with the shipping of fruit, vegetables, and other market commodities from the Southern ports. This traffic begins to be very large about this time of the year, when the first cargoes of tropical and sub-tropical fruit arrive. The officers of the union say that there is a great demand for men just now and that there are few licensed officers who are not at work. General Manager Dow of the union said last evening that the strike was the last resort. He made public a letter which he sent to the general managers of the companies with the petitions for the new wage scale on Monday. The letter says that he was delegated by the men to represent them.

"I trust you will kindly grant me an interview," it continues. "I wish you to understand that it is not the object of the association, which I represent, to discommode or hamper your company in any respect, as this association believes that there is no question between the employer and the employe that cannot and should not be settled by a proper conference."

Capt. Dow said last evening that the union could not wait indefinitely for a reply to the petitions. No acknowledgment of the letter or petition having been received, it became necessary for the union to act.

"The officers are the worst paid men in any industry," he said. "The first officer is in charge of the ship a good part of the time, and is paid from $55 to $75 a month. The third officer gets $35 a month, and the first month's salary is nearly all expended on a uniform which he must buy."

KID-GLOVE BURGLAR CAUGHT.

Wearing kid gloves and otherwise nattily attired, a young man who described himself as Henry Stolzer, residing at 1,243 Third Avenue, was arraigned before Magistrate Cornell in the Harlem Court yesterday and held in $1,500 bail for examination to-morrow on a charge of burglary. According to Detectives Gallagher and Herlihy, the prisoner is the man known as the fire-escape burglar who has been terrorizing the folks of the upper east side of town for several months.

Detective Herlihy said he believed Stolzer is the man who robbed the home of Elias Asiel, the banker, at 15 Sixty-third Street, and hopes to be able to prove a score of other cases against him. At present he is charged with breaking into the apartments of Frank Regan, at 205 East Eighty-ninth Street, on the morning of April 1. On that occasion he held up Mr. Regan at the point of a gun and robbed the house, getting away with a gold watch and $52. Regan, who is cashier of a Thirty-fourth Street furniture house, picked him out of a line of fifteen men.

Stolzer, it is alleged, traveled with a pal. Both were ex-convicts, the detective said. Their method was to gain entrance to a house after climbing to a fire escape balcony. In every instance of a robbery by way of the fire escape the burglars awakened the householder and while one stood holding a blackjack or pistol in a threatening manner the other ransacked the house.

Detective Gallagher said he had good reason to believe that Stolzer and a companion committed burglaries at the homes of Albert Braham, 302 East Ninetieth Street; Henry Rosenbach, 312 East Ninetieth Street; Frank Owens, 355 East Eighty-ninth Street; Charles Seifen, 161 East Eighty-ninth Street; Henry Herschel, 163 East Eighty-ninth Street, and at the home of Banker Asiel.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and said he worked as a driver for an expressman at Sixty-fifth Street and Second Avenue.

After the burglary at the home of Banker Asiel the banker offered a reward of $3,500 for the arrest and conviction of the men who had broken into his home. Stolzer, whom the police suspect of this crime, according to the detectives, served a term in the penitentiary in 1904 for a fire escape burglary. He will be arraigned in court to-morrow morning.

3 WEEKS ON STRANDED SHIP.

Captain and Crew Stuck to Schoner Until She Broke Up.

Three shipwrecked sailors, the mate and two apprentice boys, from the British bark Golden Wedding, which went ashore near Yucatan, Mexico, March 2, arrived yesterday as passengers on the steamship Tjomo. The bark was at anchor to ride out a gale when her anchors dragged and she grounded on the bar, off Cheltipec. On board were Capt. Ashton, the skipper; his wife, and seven men. The crew tried in vain to work their vessel off, and two of the men volunteered for the difficult task of going out in a small boat and lowering anchors so that they could try to haul her off. All these efforts were unsuccessful.

On March 3 the mate and four men put off in a boat for shore to try to get some assistance from the natives. In making their way through a high surf their boat was capsized, and they made their way to the beach after a hard fight for life. The natives refused to help them, and it was not until the surf subsided that they were able to again reach the ship.

Capt. Ashton, when he learned that help was refused, would not leave his vessel, and the crew agreed to stay with him. For three weeks they remained on board, in which time the Golden Wedding worked up to within 150 feet of shore. Then as the vessel was breaking up they left her and took a schooner for a small near-by town. From there the party reached Progreso.

ARRESTED AFTER A YEAR.

Detective Vaughn Finds One of Green Goods Men Who Beat Him Last April.

When Detective Vaughn of the Central Office walked into the Butler Street Court, Williamsburg, yesterday morning he saw there a man for whom he had been looking since April 27 of last year. It was one of the two who had severely beaten Vaughn in a hotel where he was posing as a farmer and dealing with them for the purchase of green goods. At that time the men got away.

The one arrested yesterday was taken to the Lee Avenue Court, where the old warrant, charging assault, was held. He said he was Daniel McGregor, aged 28, a clerk, and lived at 633 Manhattan Avenue. He was held without bail pending a hearing.

The woman had been separated from her husband for some time.

HAFFEN ON FENCE; NOT ON MAYOR'S SIDE

It Was Thought He'd Tumbled Off After His Newspaper Came Out.

HE NEEDS APPROPRIATIONS

And Maybe a Timely Editorial Will Help—Nobody Much Disillusionized.

Local politicians are watching with interest the attempts of Louis F. Haffen, President of the Bronx Borough, to get through the Board of Estimate appropriations for local improvements in which he is interested and the authorizing of which means much to his borough, and, incidentally, to the Borough President, who has a large political following to take care of.

Since Mayor McClellan split with Charles F. Murphy of Tammany Hall, Mr. Haffen has been, in political parlance, "on the fence." If he hasn't been astride the top rail he has been on one side, preparing to jump to the other. He is said to be interested in The North Side News, and among politicians the sentiments expressed in the editorial columns of that paper are taken as Haffen sentiments pure and simple.

This paper published yesterday for a second time a long editorial on the local political situation, seemingly aimed at Charles F. Murphy and indicating a switch by Haffen from the Murphy column to the McClellan column. The editorial concluded with this:

Murphy is baffled at all points. He can no longer nominate anybody to a city office, and if he could do so his candidate would be defeated. What gain is there in following a leader who leads only to political exile and defeat?

The publication of this sentiment in a newspaper supposed to be partly owned by an official hitherto off and on a supporter of Murphy, caused many a politician to declare that Haffen had gone over to the Mayor, deserting the Tammany leader. Others saw, or thought they saw, an attempt on the part of Haffen to "stand in" with the Mayor and get through the appropriations which have been held up for weeks in the Board of Estimate. What Haffen said last night was:

"You know well enough that I do not write the editorials, do not own the paper, and have nothing whatever to do with it."

A Tammany politician in the Bronx laughed when he heard the reports of Haffen going over to the Mayor.

"I don't believe it," he said. "Haffen is far and away the cleverest Dutchman in Tammany."

CHILD SETS DRESS ABLAZE.

Six-Year-Old Sister Badly Burned Saving Other's Life.

Edna Heitbause, who is two years old, and lives with her parents at 210 East Eighty-fifth Street, lighted a fire in the kitchen stove. She set her dress ablaze at the same time, and only the prompt action of her sister, Bertha, aged 6, saved her life.

Mrs. Margaret Heithause left the house, telling the girl, Bertha, to see that the fire was kept burning. It went out while the children were playing, and Bertha started to relight it. She put paper in the stove and went for wood.

Then Edna, thinking to aid, got some matches, climbed on a cheir, and set fire to the paper. Before she could get away from the stove she was a mess of flames.

When Bertha saw her sister's plight she threw a floor rug over her, and extinguished the flames. The child then ran through the house, and in the parlor set fire to the window curtains. Policeman Nelson carried the two children out of the house, and sent in a fire alarm.

Bertha had been painfully burned about the face and hands, trying to save her sister, and Dr. Burnham, from the Presbyterian Hospital, dressed her wounds, and took the younger sister to the hospital, where she will recover. The fire did small damage to the house.

SHIPS RACE TO AUSTRALIA.

Rival Freighters Leave Brooklyn for Long Contest.

Two freight carriers, the steamship Kasama of the Bucknall Line and the Tyser liner Hawkes Bay, started from Brooklyn yesterday afternoon on a race for Australia. Both vessels went out short of cargo, and it is possible that their owners will lose money on the voyage. This situation is brought about by the forming of two combinations for the Australian business and the consequent competition for trade.

On one side is the Tyser Line of London, the Geran Australia Steamship Company of Hamburg, and the Hansa Line of the same place. The opposition is composed of the United States and Australasia Steamship Company, the Bucknall Line, and one other concern.

Under old conditions a vessel remained in port a month or two, until her hold was filled, and then she started on her trip. To-day, in order to satisfy the shipper and to demonstrate the advantages of a certain line, the vessels go at the earliest opportunity, whether their holds are filled or not. Both vessels got away in the late afternoon, and it is expected that they will make the distance to Sydney, some 11,500 miles, in between fifty and fifty-five days.

Men Principals Have a Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Male Principals' Association of Manhattan and the Bronx was held last night in the College Hall of the Hotel Astor. Bernard Cronson, President of the association, was toastmaster, and the guests were Justices Charles L. Guy and Peter A. Hendrick of the Supreme Court, Justice Willard H. Olmsted of the Court of Special Sessions, and the Rev. D. J. Quinn, S. J., President of Fordham University. About 125 members of the association attended.

CHILD DROWNS IN TREE HOLE.

Falls Head First Into It While at Play in De Witt Clinton Park.

A number of holes three feet deep have been dug in De Witt Clinton Park, at Eleventh Avenue and Fiftieth Street, for the purpose of planting trees. Most of the holes have filled with rain water.

Tohso Yokoso, a two-and-a-half-year-old Polish girl of 561 West Fifty-fourth Street, and her brother Joseph, a few years her senior, were playing in the park yesterday afternoon. The girl stopped to pick up a bright piece of paper which flew past her, toppled, and fell head first into one of the holes.

The screams of the brother brought several men, who released the child. Dr. Gordon of Roosevelt Hospital was called, but the child was dead.

Three Children Burned to Death.

PORT HURON, Mich., April 20.—Ethel Hicks, aged 7; her brother Paul, aged 6, and their ten-months-old baby sister were burned to death in their home to-day by the explosion of a gasoline stove which the two older children had attempted to light in the absence of their parents.

SNOWSTORM WAIF FINDS A MAMMA

She Wouldn't Take the First That Came, but Red Shoes Won Her.

ADOPTED BY A RICH WOMAN

And She'll Have a Doll Bigger Than Herself and Go to Europe in Style.

The little girl, 2½, or possibly 3, years old, who was found on a doorstep by a Jersey City policeman in the snowstorm of week before last, has got a new mamma. When "Mary Classey," as the little girl calls herself, learned yesterday that Mrs. John Singleton, the wife of a wealthy mine owner of the Pacific Coast, now staying at the Ansonia, wished to take the little girl home with her, she seemed puzzled.

"Do you want a new mamma?" they asked her.

"Is my old mommer all broken so she can't be mended?" she inquired, in an injured tone.

Later, when Mrs. Singleton saw the little girl she promised her candy, dolls, and toys galore. Still the child hesitated. Finally she looked at Mrs. Singleton with a steady gaze.

"If I let you be my mommer, can I have a pair of nice, new red shoes?" she asked.

She could, and the red shoes gained the day.

It was long after midnight during the belated April snowstorm, when Policeman Saunders, on post in Grand Street, near Grove, Jersey City, saw a bundle lying on a cellar door, with almost an inch of snow covering it.

"Them Eytalians is careless," said Saunders, thinking that the parcel contained rubbish.

But, mindful of certain finds in murder cases which had won for certain members of certain police forces much fame and glory, he began to poke at the bundle. As he turned it over a little whimper came from within. A moment more and he had torn off the old blanket which had been wrapped about a little girl, who didn't seem to the policeman to be anywhere near 3.

"Where do you live?" he demanded, astonishment making his tone severe.

"Down there," she said sleepily.

"Where?" repeated Saunders.

"Down there," the child said crossly, indicating a totally different direction.

There was nothing for the policeman to do but to carry her to the station. On the way there he asked:

"Haven't you any papa or mamma?"

The child sighed in his arms.

"Popper drinks but mommer doesn't," she said. And then after a little pause she added.

"Mommer said popper tried to kill her, but he's a nice popper."

That night the little girl stayed with the matron in the station house. The next day she was sent to the home of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, at 163 Grand Street. Here she said that her name was something that Mrs. Reed, the Superintendent, took to be "Mary Classey."

"My popper works very hard in a schoolhouse," she said, "and he comes home at night so tired he can't walk straight. And he brings home a little bottle, and drinks out of it. But when my mommer sees it she says to my popper: 'Please—please don't do that.' And then my popper he gets made, and my mommer says my popper drinks."

"Ain't them shoes just lovely! Katie bought them for me," she said.

At the society's home they have sometimes kept children for six weeks t have them reclaimed by their parents at the end of that time. So they kept Mary for a time with them. Mary, too, hoped that her father and mother would come.

"I do wish my popper would drop in," she said suddenly the other day to Mrs. Reed's little girl May.

"Your mother certainly ought to come for you," declared May, who is ten.

The little girl thought a moment with a sad face. Then she said slowly:

"I guess my mommer must be dead, or she would come."

In the end Secretary Edward A. Ransom, Jr., of the society, thought it would be well to take some steps toward getting Mary adopted. She is a beautiful little girl. A newspaper in which he asked some responsible person to do that fell into the hands of Mrs. John Singleton at the Ansonia. The Singletons had been burned out both in San Francisco and in Los Angeles, where their home, Singleton Court, was one of the show places of the city. Mr. Singleton, who is President of the Yellow Aster Mining Company of California, and has extensive mining interests in Alaska, found it convenient to visit New York with his wife until they had decided whether they would rebuild in the West.

The description of the little girl—"golden hair and blue eyes"—made an instant appeal to Mrs. Singleton. Although they had no children, the Singletons had each Christmas bought many dolls—for other people's children. Last Christmas, while they were doing their annual Christmas shopping, Mrs. Singleton came across an enormous doll almost as large as a child of five.

"I want that doll," she said to her husband.

"But for whom?" he questioned. "We've provided for everybody."

"For myself," she said.

"For yourself?" he echoed.

"I've made up my mind that if the occasion ever arises," she said, "if a good opportunity presents itself, I'm going to adopt a little girl."

"Why don't you go to some asylum and pick out one?" he suggested.

"That doesn't appeal to me," she said. "It must come in some different way, but when it does I want a doll, and the little girl I adopt shall have the biggest doll in the store."

So the doll was bought. But until yesterday it had no wardrobe.

"I want you to take that doll down to Blank's," she said, "and have it dressed and get it a wardrobe."

This was on Friday. That evening Mrs. Singleton left a call at the clerk's desk for 5 A. M. She had read about the difficulties of going to Jersey and wanted plenty of time. Yesterday morning at 6 she was driving toward the ferry. So it was quite early in the morning when her carriage reached the home in Grand Street, Jersey City. There she was told that the little girl, from the exposure of the night of her finding, had caught a cold which had developed into bronchitis. So she was now in Christ Hospital.

The picture of the little girl shown to her at the home only made her the more determined, so she drove on to the hospital. There the little girl impressed her quite as much by her reserve as her beauty. She wasn't at all willing to be little girl to the first comer.

"I am having a big dolly—bigger than you are—dressed for you," didn't more than interest her.

She appeared to be examining each proposition with a wise little mind until, becoming interested, she asked about the red shoes.

"I don't believe she ever had a pair in her life," said a nurse at the hospital, "and when you said you could get them she thought you were a fairy and she'd go with you."

In accordance with the request of those at the home Mrs. Singleton will leave Mary there for a little longer that her parents may have an opportunity to claim her. Mrs. Singleton hopes, however, that when she sails for Europe in the last days of May that Mary will be with her.

Just before Mrs. Singleton had won the little girl's consent Secretary Ransom of the home had received a letter from a woman who works as a cleaner in the Salvation Army Headquarters in Fourteenth Street. She could offer the little girl a good home, she said.

But Mary is going to Europe.

PARTNERS AGREED TO DIE.

Wrecked a Prosperous Business—Both Believed to be Dead.

Special to The New York Times.

ERIE, Penn., April 20.—"If we are ever found out we will end our lives."

According to close friends, this is the agreement that Ellis Westheimer and Samuel P. Horwitz, liquor dealers, made when they got into financial trouble recently. They conducted the leading wholesale liquor store in the city. Westheimer's father had passed the business to the son, who took Horwitz into his employ and finally made him a partner. They speculated with disastrous results.

The two disappeared on Monday, and yesterday word was received here that Horwitz had committed suicide in the Kupper Hotel, in Kansas City, Mo. A report here to-night says that Westheimer's body had been found in the Chicago River. The liabilities will exceed $40,000.

ELLA RAWLS READER A COPPER PROMOTER

Some Person Let the Secret Out, So She Tells the True Story.

MILLIONS IN THE DEAL

She Kept $5,000,000 in Stock for Her Work, and the Guggenheims Are Hovering Round.

Mrs. Ella Rawls Reader, who gained much prominence in her contests and those of Mr. Reader with J. B. Haggin over the claims for commissions on mining property in Peru, and with William Nelson Cromwell regarding concessions from the Santo Domingo Government, has recently busied herself with the development of the Cerro de Pasco Tunnel and Mining Company, a Peruvian mining company, of which she is President, and with the acquisition of mining properties in this country.

Mrs. Reader, it was learned yesterday, has just taken over a controlling interest in the Copper Basin Mining Company, a $6,000,000 Nevada mining company, has been elected President of the company, and has placed the control of the property with the Cerro de Pasco Company as a holding company.

Mrs. Reader, in her office at 45 Wall Street, confirmed yesterday the report that she had been to Boston early in the week to take over control of the Copper Basin Mining Company, and explained the relations of her company, the Cerro de Pasco Company, in which she owns about $5,000,000 out of the $6,000,000 stock issued, and of the newly acquired Copper Basin Company. Control of the latter formerly rested with a Boston syndicate, which still has three representatives on the Board of Directors, while Mrs. Reader has four representatives.

Telling of her trip to Boston to complete her acquisition of control of the Nevada Company, Mrs. Reader said:

Who Could Have Betrayed Secret?

"I was hoping to keep it all secret, but now that I have accomplished my purpose, it does not really make any difference whether it comes out or not. In fact, it is already known in Boston that I have got the Copper Basin Company, but I was surprised that any one there outside of the parties interested came to know anything about it. I discovered, though, that some one kept track of every move I made in the negotiations. They must have traced me around from place to place. I don't know how else they could have found out about it all.

"My company now owns $2,000,000 out of $3,750,000 of Copper Basin Mining stock outstanding, the balance of the capital amounting to $1,250,000 being still in the treasury. None of this treasury stock will now be issued. The Copper Basin Mining Company owns a valuable mine in which 600,000 tons of copper ore, averaging about 8 per cent. copper, are already blocked out. The company owns 188 acres of copper property besides about 500 acres of timber land. Plans have already been made for the erection of a 250-ton smelter, and the machinery is now on its way to the mine. We have been shipping ore by wagon since before the beginning of the year. I am hoping that by the end of this year we can increase the output of the mine to 1,000 tons a day, but I am not sure how fast we can get along with the work. We have other extensive development plans under way, including, besides the smelter, a cable tramway and other plans about which I cannot talk just yet. The Guggenheims are working on one of the veins which traverses our property, and they seem to be meeting with success in this work. The Copper Basin mines are about fifty miles from Ely, and near enough to the Nevada Northern, which the Guggenheims own, for us to make shipments over that line."

Got $5,000,000 for Her Work.

Going back to the position of the Cerro de Pasco Company, the holding company for the Copper Basin property, Mrs. Reader said:

"My company is capitalized at $12,000,000, including $6,000,000 of preferred stock. When the company was organized I took $5,000,000 of the common stock for my work. The preferred stock we only sell when we need funds to take over some other property or for working capital. The first lot of preferred stock which was sold with a bonus of common stock was placed at $7 a share for $10 shares. I now sell the preferred stock whenever funds are needed for new acquisitions for $20 a share without any bonus in common. The stock has been placed at this price abroad. There is now about $1,000,000 of the preferred stock out with $5,000,000 still in the treasury.

"The Cerro de Pasco Company is one of the largest owners of copper and silver mines in Peru. I started to run the company not on a speculative basis but on an industrial basis. I was told I could never succeed in such a plan, but I think I have. The preferred stock of my company is entitled to 7 per cent. dividends, which have been paid regularly and in addition to one-fifth of the net profits after the common stock has been paid 7 per cent. I naturally want to keep the issue of preferred stock as low as possible for then there will be just so much more of the company's earnings available for the common stock—my stock—which I keep for control."

CHEMIST FOUND DEAD IN BED.

Glass That Had Contained Acid Near By and Coroner Will Investigate.

George W. Cook, a chemist, who lived with his wife and two young daughters on the fourth floor of the apartment house at 122 West 115th Street, died under suspicious circumstances yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Cook says her husband was the best of spirits when she left the house about 6 o'clock to do some marketing. The finding of a glass, the contents of which, according to Coroner Dooley, looked like prussic acid, caused the Coroner and the police to doubt that Mr. Cook's death was due to natural causes.

Mr. Cook was in bed when his daughter Margaret came into the room. The girl could not awaken him and hurried out to get a doctor. She met her mother entering the house. Several physicians were called. They said Mr. Cook had been dead several minutes. An inquest will be held.

McLENNAN'S SHARP TALK

No Lawyer Should Forget His Ideals When He Becomes Member of a Legislative Body.

Justice Peter B. McLennan, who presides over the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the Fourth Department, which embraces the Western part of the State, came down to the annual dinner of the New York University Law School Alumni at the Hotel Astor last night and told a company of 400 members of the bar and bench some things about the responsibility of the lawyer to the body politic that made them sit up and take notice. The diners included twenty or more Justices of the Supreme Court and the inferior tribunals, and the guests of honor were the four Justices presiding over the districts of the Appellate Division, Edward Patterson of the First Department, Michael H. Hirschberg of the Second, Walter Leroy Smith of the Third, and Peter B. McLennan of the Fourth.

Judge William F. Wallace of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals was to have been a guest also, but he was kept away by a severe cold, and took occasion to announce in his letter of regret that he contemplated tendering his resignation from the bench within a few days. Besides Justice McLennan, Justice Patterson made some pointed remarks, addressing his, as it happened, to the proposition that the great need of the courts was for lawyers better equipped for the trial of cases.

Better Lawyers; Better Judges.

Justice Patterson declared that the young lawyers of the present day, thanks to the modern law schools, are becoming better and better equipped in the strictly legal side of their work, to the end that briefs submitted by some of the younger members of the bar are often illuminating and actually helpful to the Justices of the higher courts. But when it came to the trial of cases Justice Patterson was of another mind, and in stating it he made a slip of the tongue that set the diners in a roar.

"What we want most now," he declared, "is a better standard of trial Judges—I mean lawyers."

The applause and laughter lasted for a couple of minutes before Justice Patterson could make himself heard again.

"Well," he added, "I'm not going to withdraw that either," and then there was another round of cheers. Before him, at the table directly below the speakers' dais, sat District Attorney Jerome, and there was a renewed outburst of merriment when the Presiding Justice of the First Department continued:

"A recent exhibition made in our courts ought to satisfy us of the truth of this statement."

Mr. Jerome laughed with the rest, as did Justice James B. Fitzgerald, also present, who presided at the Thaw trial.

"This improvement in the calibre of the trial lawyers," added Justice Patterson, when he had a chance to proceed, "can only come if the younger members of the bar are made to go into court, as their elders did in their day, and see the experts in the trial of cases, that they may learn from them how to handle issues before the court and jury."

Justice McLennan, before he came to the matter of a lawyer's responsibility, had something to say for the benefit of his colleague of the First Division.

Justice McLennan's Speech.

"I have no doubt," he began, "that the briefs handed up by the young lawyers practicing before the First Department are helpful and luminous. My only regret is that the opinions of that department that have come before us do not bear that stamp. I regret that we in the provincial districts have more difficulty reconciling ourselves to some things that come from that department than to anything else. I fear that the Fourth Department is a little behind the times. The difference is that in our department we try to declare the law as it is and we do not think it permissible to declare what the law would have been if we had had the making of it. We take the cold facts—or we're supposed to anyway—and then we determine what the law is as we understand it and leave it to the Court of Appeals to determine if we are right.

"But seriously," Justice McLennan went on, "the lawyers are supposed to be the great conservative force in the community. They are trained to know the right from the wrong and to know not only what is best for their clients, but what is best for the Commonwealth. There never was a time in the history of the world when the relations of lawyer to client were on a higher plane than at present. Seldom do we find a lawyer recreant to his trust to his client or find him stooping to the part of ambulance chaser, which puts into the work of the lawyer a monetary consideration that ought to be prohibited by law.

"But the difficulty is not that the lawyer overreaches his client. The difficulty is that the lawyer forgets when he enters on the other business of citizenship that he is still a lawyer. Does he take into the Legislature when he becomes an Assemblyman, or a Senator, the same ideals that he entertains for his client, or does he think that it will now answer well enough for him to play politics or to enter into schemes to advance the interests of himself and his friends that as a lawyer he would never think of engaging in to the detriment of the interests of his client?

"Our laws are made in great measure by lawyers, and if they are ill-made, it is the lawyers among our lawmakers who are chargeable with the responsibility. The lawyer in the United States Senate or in the House at Washington, or the lawyer in our State Senate or Assembly, or even in the Board of Aldermen of any one of our great cities, not infrequently appears a different man, acting on a different basis from that he would take for himself if he were representing clients in a private capacity.

Decreasing Respect for Law.

"I am no pessimist, but in this country we are at a critical period. What is the situation? We see capital and labor clutching at each other's throats. Is the lawyer interested in the undertakings of his employers, and the employer interested in the welfare of the labor? Not at all. Each one is going it alone.

"Another thing—we see corporate power in the last quarter of a century become so arrogant that it almost controls the destinies of the Nation, and the corporations have become so powerful that they say that they will brook no control. It is hardly to be wondered at. This misuse of power has been acquiesced in by a great majority of the people of the country during the entire period of vast corporate growth.

"Again we see in the last few years wealth accumulated so as to create class distinctions that have never hitherto been known in this Republic and by reason of them respect for law and authority as such is hardly known in some parts of the community. Do we propose to have these things continue? Is it not true that we have arrived at a critical period? But what is the remedy, do you say? My suggestion is that the lawyers be honest with themselves and with the people they represent, to the end that they formulate laws to adjust the differences between capital and labor, to control corporate power in such a way as will do injury to no one.

"We find an illustration in the working of the Railroad Rate bill and in the situation it was designed to meet. For years the railroads have been giving rebates because forced to do it by powerful shipping interests. Why should we have said during all this time that the people who have yielded to the pressure are criminals while the others who have benefited by the wrong doing are hailed as our great captains of industry? So you have heard arraignment upon arraignment of the trusts. But where have you heard a man denounce his neighbor who might own some Standard Oil stock and enjoy the dividends accruing on it with a full knowledge of the methods by which they were earned? There has been only envy for the fortunate ones.

"Now, it is suggested that there shall be radical remedial legislation. It is high time for us not to seek to punish or destroy, but for us, as lawyers, appreciative of our duties to the body politic, to see to it that sane laws are made and enforced in a firm and reasonable manner, and to seek to inspire a sentiment in the country that will bring the law into public respect, and not into contempt.

Court Reform Suggested.

Justice Walter Lloyd Smith of Elmira, the Presiding Justice of the Third Department of the Appellate Division, offered as his suggestion that there should be a further division of cases appealable to the Court of Appeals, whereby such issues should be limited to those involving constitutional or capital questions wherever the decision of the Appellate Division was unanimous. Justice Smith thought that this could be put into practical application by allowing the Appellate Division to send up questions of law to the Court of Appeals in the course of its consideration of cases just as the United States Circuit Court sends legal questions up to the Supreme Court of the United States without burdening that tribunal with the trial of the entire cause.

The other speakers were Dean Clarence D. Ashley of the New York University Law School and Patrick Francis Murphy, who was introduced by Victor J. Dowling, the toastmaster, as evidence that clients still survived. Mr. Murphy kept the company in roars by telling them among other things that there were two notable features about a retiring Judge: He generally retains his title, and, being tempted to transform influence into affluence, is much sought after by the criminal rich. Mr. Murphy was a little sceptical of modern-day justice.

"Justice," said he, "was represented by the ancients with a bandage over her forehead. In modern times she is less an etching than a cartoon, and the bandage not infrequently hides a black eye."

Mr. Murphy also told a story of a wealthy client whose lawyer telegraphed him from a distant city:

"Justice has triumphed."

"Appeal immediately," was the answer.

AMBASSADOR CREEL DINED.

Guest of Honor of the Spanish-American Club Last Night.

Don Enrique C. Creel, Mexican Ambassador to the United States, was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Spanish-American Club of New York at the Hotel Marie Antoinette last night.

All of the officers of the club and about sixty members attended. There were several short addresses. Don Aristides Martinez, President of the club, presided and welcomed the Ambassador.

Ambassador Creel's address was in Spanish, as were all the others. He said that the Spanish-American Club was to be complimented on the great part it had taken in promoting friendly trade relations between the United States and the Spanish-American countries. "We should all make the greatest possible effort to make stronger the friendly ties that bind the United States with the Spanish-American countries," he said.

President Has Proposed a Naval Limitation to Nations—Straus's Plan to Promote Peace.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Somewhat critical reviews of recent developments in international affairs were indulged in at the speech-making session of the American Society of International Law, which concluded its first annual meeting here to-day.

John W. Foster announced as a fact that President Roosevelt had proposed to some of the leading nations of the world "that we at least make a limitation on the size of vessels of war that shall be built in the future."

Prof. Woolsey of Yale urged that "wars of passion" could be abolished if international law should provide that all wars must begin with a proclamation, and that a "cooling" time of thirty or sixty days intervene between the proclamation and actual hostilities. Such an arrangement, he said, would have obviated the South African war and also the Russo-Japanese war.

Representative Richard Bartholdt spoke of the necessity of making The Hague Conference permanent, and said that the United States, with the impetus toward peace which President Roosevelt had achieved, could accomplish this result by a united demand at the next Hague Conference.

Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who presided at the meeting, expressed the hope that should the forthcoming Hague Conference fail to prescribe a limitation as to armament, it would issue a mandate that any neutral nation supplying a warring nation with money should be adjudged guilty of a hostile act.

Richard Olney, ex-Secretary of State, was perhaps the most caustic in his interpretation of the policy of the United States regarding Santo Domingo and the acquirement of the Panama Canal Zone without compensation to Colombia.

Olney on a Concert of Powers.

Having for his text the development of international law as a science, Mr. Olney first pointed out the necessity of having international law founded on the aggregate action of a concert of powers. This was well illustrated, he said, in the European concert which had for its purpose the regulation of European international policies and the Eastern question. The European concert was somewhat analagous to the Monroe Doctrine, he said, although there was in fact an independent distinction, as under the Monroe Doctrine proper the United States assumed no protectorate over or attempted any interference with the external or internal affairs of any American State. Mr. Olney then proceeded to discuss more recent history.

"Within a comparatively short time," he said, "other doctrines have been officially and unofficially announced and given prestige and currency by being described as the Monroe Doctrine, or as necessary corollaries from it. Under these new doctrines it is intimated that if an American State does not behave itself well in either its external or internal relations—good behavior according to our own standards of course—it may be forced by the United States and coerced into doing the right thing; if necessary may have its revenues sequestered and applied by the United States according to the latter's notions of justice and equity.

"It is too plain for discussion that the Monroe Doctrine cannot be invoked in support of any such pretensions; that they are seriously objectionable, as calculated to wound the pride and excite the enmity of all other American States, and as committing the United States to undertakings of the most vexatious, burdensome, and dangerous character.

Wants No American Bossism.

"Our institutions will surely live and our people continue to prosper without the United States converting itself into an international policeman for the American continents, or into a debt-collecting agency for the benefit of foreign creditor States and their citizens.

Mr. Olney paused and asked: "How should the United States proceed?" and answered: "Surely, not by making itself a sort of International 'American boss.'"

He added: "Let it be assumed, however, as it should be, that the new doctrines, however objectionable in some aspects, may, and should, be credited to a wholly worthy origin."

"The United States is now prosecuting a great public work on territory which but recently was the property of a sister republic. There is no pretense that that republic ever parted with its territory voluntarily. The territory was practically expropriated by the United States, claiming—and it is the best justification the circumstances afford—of acting as the 'mandatory of civilization.' But if the United States is to be deemed to have held a mandate from civilization to sequestrate Colombian soil for a great public work, it should also be deemed to have held a mandate to see that Colombia was duly compensated—otherwise civilization stands revealed as an objectionable personage, quite insensible to the more elementary claims of justice."

At the conclusion of the address of Mr. Olney the general topic of The Hague Conference and the development on international law as a science was discussed.

MOB OF WOMEN BEAT A MAN.

LONDON, Ohio, April 20.—George H. Ward, a farmer, near Roscoe, Madison County, was soundly whipped yesterday by sixteen women because of his alleged continual whipping of his wife and other cruelties to her.

Mrs. Ward died Thursday, and Friday Ward buried her, digging the grave himself to save expenses. The women met at an appointed place armed with buggy whips. When Ward came from the grave they pounced upon him and beat him, crying, "Beast," "Brute," and "Dog."

Mrs. Ward before her death filed a petition for divorce, alleging cruelty.

THROWN FROM B. R. T. CARS.

Passenger Has Concussion of Brain—Inspector Accused.

Alfred Johnson, 31 years old, of 760 Gravesend Avenue, Brooklyn, was badly hurt last night when he was put off a Coney Island ear on the Culver line at Sixth Street and Gravesend Avenue. He was taken to the Seventy-second Precinct Station, where Dr. Albert found that he had suffered concussion of the brain and a dislocated wrist. He was taken to the Kings County Hospital.

Johnson got on the car at the Sixth Street crossing, the point where the second fare to Coney Island is collected. He refused to pay, and the conductor called the inspector stationed there. The inspector, it is alleged, shoved him from the car, and private detectives of the B. R. T. took him to the station.

BRONX CONTRACTORS KICK AT WATER RATES

WASTED, O'BRIEN SAYS

Commissioner Declares Meters Are Cut Out and Hydrants Badly Damaged by Contractors.

Bronx contracting firms, and especially those who have recently taken large contracts are arranging to make trouble for Water Commissioner John J. O'Brien because of an increase in the rates charged them for water used in the work of constructing buildings. They charge the Commissioner with exceeding his authority and so arranging things as to increase the patronage of his office.

Prior to two weeks or so ago contractors were charged $5 a month for every portable boiler used by them on building jobs. Recently the price was increased to $13.64 for 20-horse-power boilers a month, and to $26.05 for 40-horse-power boilers. In adidtion, according to Deputy Commissioner Michael Hunt, a contractor was obliged to pay the salary of an inspector, amounting to $3 a day.

Michael J. Leahy, President of the Contractors' Association of the Bronx, has written to the Water Commissioner on behalf of the association, complaining of the increase and pointing out that whereas a twenty-horse power boiler hitherto cost the contractor only $60 a year for water, it will now cost him $1,201.44. He asserts that the water actually used in such a boiler, if metered, would cost but 15 cents a day, or less than $47 a year. He closes his letter with the assertion that the extra cost of construction will fall on the property owners.

Mr. Leahy has two or three sewer contracts with the city, and in complaining to Deputy Hecht before writing Mr. O'Brien he asked to have a meter attached to the pipes supplying water to the boilers where that work is in progress. His request was refused.

Mr. Hecht said last night that the reason for the increase was that contractors, not only in the Bronx, but all over the city, caused great damage to hydrants and wasted water by wholesale. He also said that it had been found that where meters were put in, it very often happened that as soon as the Water Inspector had disappeared the meter was "cut out" and the water used freely, and very often wastefully. The order for the increased rate, he added, had come direct from the Commissioner.

POTATOES CORNERED.

The wholesale price of potatoes in this city has advanced 50 per cent. in the last two days, and as practically all of the large operators have bought all they could get hold of there is little prospect that the consuming public will have a chance to buy supplies at the prices which have prevailed hitherto this season. Maine potatoes, which were quotable at $1.50 per bag on Thursday, were held firmly at $2.25 yesterday, and State stock has advanced in about the same proportion.

The flurry in the market was caused by the freeze in the South early this week, particularly in the large producing districts around Charleston and Savannah, where the supplies of new potatoes for this market are largely obtained during the Spring months. Prior to the freeze it had already been known that the potato crop of Florida had been curtailed about 50 per cent. by the protracted drought in that State, and while some of this stock is already in the market, it is held at $6.50 to $7 per barrel, a price too high to bring them in competition with old potatoes, even were prices of the latter much further advanced. European potatoes, which are ordinarily called upon to relieve a shortage here in the Spring months, cannot be delivered here for less than $2.80 per sack, so that there is room for the large operators to force prices still higher without meeting competition.

No sooner had the speculators confirmed the freeze damage early in the week than they sent telegraphic orders throughout all of the large producing districts in New York State and Maine and bought all the supplies of old potatoes they could quietly obtain. In the meantime prices in New York City were not advanced, because this of course would have caused the growers in the country to put their prices up. Toward the end of the week the big buyers had obtained all the supplies they wanted and then suddenly advanced prices.

In addition to the effect of the freeze upon the potato market it has caused an advance of about 100 per cent. in the price of strawberries owing to the fact that the Southern crop was curtailed by the freeze. It will also mean that watermelons and cantaloupes from that section which usually reach this market about June 1, will not be here until about July 1, and that there will be a very short supply of Southern vegetables of all descriptions here this Spring.

The freeze has been the most disastrous to the trucking interests through the southeast that has ever been experienced since this great industry developed.

BELMONT ORDERS STEEL CARS

Forty all-steel cars of new design will be contracted for this week by Theodore P. Shonts, the President of the Interborough Company, for use on the lines of the New York & Queens County Railway, one of the Belmont properties. The cars are all to be supplied with airbrakes.

Behind this simple announcement made yesterday lies the fact that it is the present expectation of the New York and Queens County officials, including Mr. Belmont, that the so-called Steinway, or Belmont, tunnel, from the foot of East Forty-second Street to Long Island City, will be opened for operation about Nov. 1. It is announced that the delivery of all forty of the cars will be required by Dec. 1, and it is expected that some of them will be in operation by Nov. 1.

The cars are to be thirty-eight feet long, and will be provided with all recent improvements in the line of equipment. They will have cross seats and seating accommodations for forty-four passengers each. The approximated cost of each car is $8,000, a total expenditure of $320,000 for rolling stock for the Belmont lines in Queens County.

It was learned that the cars are to be so constructed that they may be operated in the Steinway Tunnel, which is really the primary reason for adding to the present equipment of the Queens County lines. Under the franchise granted several years ago, before August Belmont entered the metropolitan traction field, nothing was said about the operation of fireproof cars exclusively, however. The tunnel under the East River has been constructed under this franchise, the legality of which has been questioned.

It was learned yesterday that the McAdoo tunnels under the North River from the foot of Morton Street to Hoboken will be opened Oct. 1 unless present plans miscarry. The tunnels are completed, and the subway that is to extend up Sixth Avenue to Thirty-third Street has been practically finished as far as Hudson Street, while the work beyond that point to Fourteenth Street has progressed very rapidly.

If the line is opened in October, as is proposed, it will have its terminus at that time at Fourteenth Street, with a station there and at a point just below where the line turns into Morton Street. It is expected that this short road when put in operation will draw a large proportion of the traffic by ferry to Hoboken, as well as some of the Lackawanna's suburban travel.

Alleged Hallboy Jewel Thief Caught.

Samuel Tomment, the colored hall boy accused of stealing a handbag containing jewelry and checks from the apartment of Mrs. Abraham Grossman in the Hotel Balmoral on Friday night, was arrested in South Norwalk, Conn., yesterday while trying to dispose of one of the rings. A detective has been sent to bring him to this city for trial.

E. R. THOMAS'S $40,000 LOSS.

An order directing the Silver Plate Trust to issue five certificates, of 100 shares each, to E. R. Thomas, the horseman, was made by Judge Charles J. Parker of the New Jersey Circuit Court, in Jersey City, yesterday. The certificates are to replace five certificates which disappeared from Mr. Thomas's residence in New York. Their value is nearly $40,000.

Thomas testified that several weeks ago he took certificates in the Silver Plate Trust from his office to his house and called to his wife to take the certificates to the jewel safe. Mrs. Thomas was taking a bath, and sent a maid, who took the certificates to the jewel safe. The certificates represented $100,000. The next morning Mrs. Thomas took the certificates from the jewel case and gave them to her husband, who tucked them into his pocket and went to his office in his automobile. When he got there five of the certificates were missing.

The Pinkerton Detective Agency has been unable to find them. Thomas was corroborated by his wife, her maid, Letitia Adams, and a Pinkerton detective. The court ordered that Mr. Thomas must give a bond for twice the value of the certificates to the trust to indemnify it against loss should the stock be found.

$580,000 CAR-TRUST BONDS.

The American Car and Foundry Company, it was learned yesterday, has executed a car trust for $580,000 covering equipment sold by that company to the Erie Railroad. The equipment bonds bear 4½ per cent. interest and mature in monthly installments over a period of ten years. The American Car and Foundry Company, as vendor in connection with various railroads as vendees, has executed a number of similar car trusts recently.

The operation amounts to the Car and Foundry Company accepting equipment trust obligations from the railroads to which it sells equipment, the Car Company in turn guaranteeing the bonds and placing them in the market. This form of financing has been resorted to in order to facilitate the purchase of equipment by railroads which do not find it convenient to purchase their equipment by direct payment in full to the equipment manufacturing companies.

AID MEN TEACHERS' SALARY BILL FIGHT

Commissioners Stern and Harrison Assure Them of Board's Support.

OPPOSED TO EQUALITY

Commissioners Say a Fair Scheme of Readjusting Pay for Men and Women Should Be Adopted.

Commissioners Abraham Stern and Robert L. Harrison of the Board of Education went to the mass meeting of the Association of Male Teachers and Principals of the city yesterday morning to assure them again of the support of the board in their fight against the Salary Equalization bill. The meeting was held in Terrace Garden, at Fifty-eighth Street and Third Avenue, and seven or eight hundred teachers turned out for it. The bill which the association is working to defeat has passed the Senate, and it remains now to be seen whether it will be handled in the Assembly by the Committee on Cities or the Committee on Rules. The teachers hope to see it defeated. Mr Stern, who was first introduced by President William L. Ettinger of the association, said, in part:

"The Board of Education has taken an unbiased stand. It is not prejudiced for either the men or the women, but it deems it its duty to look after the welfare of the entire public school system of this city. And while the board has no hostile feeling toward the women teachers, it hopes earnestly that if this bill is beaten there will be no such feeling between the men and women teachers, for if the interests of the public schools are to be conserved the men and women both must work together for the best good of the entire system.

"The promise which the board has made to the Interborough Association of Women Teachers that the board would favor an equitable scheme of readjusting the schedules so as to give increases for both men and women will be carried out, and just as soon as the board is informed of the defeat of this measure, it will lose no time in getting to work on such an undertaking. This in itself will show the attitude of the board toward its teaching staff."

"The question in which the board is interested," he said, "is not that of equal pay for men and women teachers, but it is the question of a fair and just compensation for good and honest work. I believe that the schedules should be adjusted so that both the men and the women would get as much as the city can afford to pay for efficient service. It was a pleasure to go to Albany on behalf of the board in the endeavor to have justice done in defeating what seemed to us a very bad piece of legislation."

Mr. Ettinger was the other speaker on the Equalization bill.

"The men teachers," he said, "are not opposed to higher salaries for women; their campaign is carried on for a principle, and that principle is that a man is worthy of his hire, and no Legislature has the right to put on the statute books a law saying that a man cannot receive any more salary than a woman or that the City of New York cannot raise the salary of one man without raising the salaries of eight women.

"Our position has been misrepresented from the start. When I went to Albany a month ago on this matter I found a distinctly hostile sentiment, and even after removing the hostility I found that we couldn't remove the votes that had been pledged to the passage of the bill in the Senate. But the prospects for its defeat are better now. We showed them that equalization had not been tried in other cities, and suggested that if it is to be tried at all it be tried elsewhere than in New York, where women teachers are getting higher salaries than anywhere else in the State."

Mr. Ettinger denied that there was any difference of opinion among the men teachers about the bill, and the enthusiasm at yesterday's meeting appeared to bear him out. It was said before the meeting that a good many of the women teachers are withdrawing their support of it for the reason that it threatens the system of advancing salaries on which the pay of both men and women teachers has been determined in the past, and that the primary teachers, who are all women, have come to realize that it will mean nothing to them to have in the law a provision that their pay must be equal to that of men teaching in the same grade.

A petition has been signed by thirty-five women teachers and about the same number of men teachers in the Manual Training High School asking that the bill be amended so as not to affect the regular salary advances of teachers not in the graded service, which, it is declared, will be prevented if the present bill becomes a law. This will be forwarded to the appropriate committee, and other similar petitions will be prepared for circulation within the next few days.

RAILROAD BUILDS A CHURCH.

New Parish Houses for St. Michael's Completed by Pennsylvania.

The building of a new Church of St. Michael, with parish school, rectory, and convent, to replace the old buildings on Thirty-second Street and Ninth Avenue, soon to be torn down, has been almost finished by the Pennsylvania Railroad. This unusual undertaking for a railroad company was started last Fall, and now all except the interior finishings is complete.

The old Church of St. Michael and its connecting parish buildings stand on a tongue of land surrounded on three sides by the terminal excavations for the Pennsylvania tunnel. As soon as the five priests connected with the parish and the thirty sisters in the convent have moved into the new structure on Thirty-second Street, the old buildings will be torn down and their foundations blasted away to give room for the Pennsylvania tracks.

Instead of obtaining the site, which reaches back to Thirty-first Street and has a frontage of 148 feet on Ninth Avenue, by condemnation proceedings, the officials of the road agreed to purchase a plot of land of the same size on Thirty-fourth Street, between Ninth and Tenth Avenues, and on it to build practically a reproduction of the old church, with the parish buildings in a more modern style.

According to this contract, the entire front of the old church, with its façade of carved limestone, has been removed bodily to the new site and set up exactly as before. The rose window and nineteen memorials in the old façade have been reset in stone for the new.

Silversmiths in Merger.

ALBANY, April 20.—The Silversmiths' Company of New York, which is said to be a merger of the Silversmiths' Company and the Silverware Stocks Company, filed its certificate of consolidation with the Secretary of State to-day. The capital is $14,000,000. The Directors include Edward Holbrook and John S. Holbrook of New York and Herbert J. Mills of Providence.

POLICE GRAFT CHARGES UP.

San Francisco Captain Accuses Chief Before Grand Jury.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—Capt. John Mooney of the Bush Street Police Station appeared before the Grand Jury to-day to substantiate his charges that houses of ill-repute, saloons, and illegal restaurants have flourished since the earthquake of April 18, 1906, in his district under the protection of his superior officer, Chief Dinan, in particular. Charges of insubordination have been preferred against Mooney by Dinan.

The officer was in the witness chair for nearly two hours. Many exhibits, comprising police records, were examined. The Grand Jury adjourned until Tuesday.

UNION PACIFIC LAND MONOPOLY ATTACKED

Western Lawyers Declare That Sale of Tracts Can Be Forced.

BONAPARTE HAS A REPORT

Some Towns in Wyoming Are Owned by the Railroad — Great Coal Deposits Tied Up.

Special to The New York Times.

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, April 20.—As one of the results of the recent investigation of the Inter-State Commerce Commission into Western land frauds prominent Western lawyers have recommended to Attorney General Bonaparte that an attempt be made to force the Union Pacific to return to the public domain millions of acres of land in Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Wyoming, and Utah. Of the original grant of more than 20,000,000 acres made to the Union Pacific by the Government when the road was being constructed, it still has enough to cover the States of Connecticut, Rhode Island and Delaware and have a farm of nearly half a million acres left..

Immediately after the Inter-State Commerce Commission's investigation of the conditions which have made possible the monopoly in coal and lands which the Union Pacific has maintained for twenty-five years, Commissioner Prouty called upon Western attorneys who had assisted at the investigation to submit recommendations for remedial legislation or other means of dealing with the monopoly. These recommendations have been sent to the commission and are now in the hands of the Attorney General.

"Destroy the land monopoly of the Union Pacific," is the basis of the report. A paragraph of the report says: "It seems that the conditions which attended the grant have all been evaded, disregarded, or vitiated by fraud or have lapsed by time."

One of the charter provisions under which the land was granted is as follows: "All such lands so granted by this section, which shall not be sold or disposed of by the said company within three years after the entire road is completed, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre, to be paid to the Government land offices and thereafter to the Union Pacific Company."

It is forty years since this land was granted to the railroad, and to-day nearly 6,0000,000 acres of the grant is still in possession of that company.

When Carl Schurz was Secretary of the Interior an investigation of these lands was held. Mr. Schurz construed this clause to mean that the land not disposed of should be returned to the Government and sold as other public lands, the proceeds to go to the Union Pacific.

The Union Pacific has placed a blanket mortgage on all its lands, however, and the Supreme Court has decided that, as long as the mortgage was unpaid innocent purchasers would suffer and the lands could not be returned to the public domains. When the Union Pacific went into the hands of a receiver this mortgage was paid off. The Western lawyers now hold that these lands could be taken away despite the fact that Congress permitted the company to reorganize.

The monopoly which the Union Pacific maintains in Southern Wyoming is the most complete in the world. There are towns which belong to its absolutely. Towns have been formed but never incorporated. Streets have been decded to the municipality, but remain the property of the railroad. The houses which have been erected all belong to the railroad. Such a town is Hanna, where the located several of the greatest coal camps in the West. Every street and alley bears the following sign:

The first thing a passenger sees when he gets off a train is a sign telling him he is on the private property of the railroad. The hotel belongs to the railroad; so does the bank and the stores.

If a labor agitator appears among the miners he is promptly ordered to get off the company's grounds, and if he refuses he is arrested by a policeman, put on board a Union Pacific train, and sent out of the Union Pacific country. He can do nothing. He is a trespasser on private property.

On what appears to be a public road between Rock Springs and Horse Thief Cañon, a distance of twenty-two miles, there are just twenty-two signs telling the public that the road is the property of the Union Pacific, and that everybody must keep off except those who have permits from the railroad.

The railroad actually owns each alternate section for twenty miles on each side of its tracks. The Governments owns the intervening sections. To get from one Government section to another it is necessary to pass over the railroad lands, and the railroad company promptly arrests all trespassers. If a sheep man wants to lease a certain amount of Union Pacific land for his flock, he must pay rental for the Government lands lying between the Union Pacific sections.

Within sight of the Union Pacific's main line are thousands of acres of the best coal lands in the West. There is a chronic shortage of coal in Union Pacific territory, but the railroad will not give a coal operator permission to cross the lands between the coal and the railroad, although in some cases the prospective mines are within a hundred feet of the tracks. As a result the coal is not mined by independents, and the Union Pacific product is sold at enormous prices.

It has been recommended that these coal lands, as well as the other lands, be regained by the Government. The Union Pacific has offered to return thousands of acres of these lands if prosecutions of alleged fraud in obtaining the lands are withdrawn. This point is also under consideration by the commission and Attorney General.

Should Mr. Bonaparte force the railroad to return the approximately 6,000,000 acres of the original land grant which remain in its possession, it will mean the breaking of the monopoly and the influx of thousands of homesteaders. However, there will be difficulties in the way.

"There is no use going to law against the devil when the court is held in hell," says the report sent to Washington, intimating that there is no use trying a Union Pacific case in some Wyoming courts.

HAD FEARS OF ASSASSINATION

Dr. McAfee Wants Death of Dr. Burr at Westborough Investigated.

The Rev. Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, expressed the belief yesterday that the recent violent death at Westborough, Mass., of the Rev. Dr. Everett D. Burr should be investigated, the clergyman having communicated to Dr. McAfee shortly before his death fears of assassination because of his vigorous crusade against the atrocities in the rubber region of the Congo.

Dr. Burr was killed about six weeks ago either by falling or being thrown from a moving train while on his way from his home in Newton Centre, Mass., to Boston, where he was to talk on the subject of the Congo. Dr. McAfee explains his delay in suggesting an investigation by the fact that he had been away from the city for some time.

Dr. Burr expressed his fears to Dr. McAfee when he was in Brooklyn last December. He made a speech in the Lafayette Avenue Church as a result of which President Roosevelt was petitioned to interfere in the Congo.

The dead body of Dr. Burr was found beside the Boston & Albany Railroad tracks near Westborough. There was a report at the time that his gold watch and chain, $100 in cash, and an overcoat were stolen. The Massachusetts authorities were of the opinion that Dr. Burr's death was accidental.

SHIELDS'S ANNIVERSARY.

U. S. Commissioner Has Been 52 Years in Federal Courts.

United States Commissioner Shields celebrated yesterday in the Federal Building the fifty-second anniversary of his service in the United States courts. The room was thronged all day with friends of the Commissioner, who came to congratulate him. His desk was covered with flowers.

Commissioner Shields entered the Government service in 1855 as an under clerk in the office of the Clerk of the Federal Court. Yesterday, in recounting his experiences, he said that when he entered the Government's employ the United States courts were held in the brownstone building in City Hall Park, later used by the Court of General Sessions. The offices of the Federal courts at the time were in what was then known as the old Commodore Stevens home, in College Place, now West Broadway, near Murray Street. They moved to their present quarters when the Federal Building was completed in 1875.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY AGAIN CHECKS CRAIN

WANTS STERNER JUSTICE

District Attorney Jerome had another hurried summons yesterday to the court presided over by Judge T. C. T. Crain of General Sessions, and prevented him from deciding in Chambers the case of Lawrence P. Mingey, who is accused of forgery. After the District Attorney had made his protest the case went over for a public hearing to-morrow morning.

The alleged crime was committed as long ago as March 30, 1904. It is charged that on that date Mingey signed a check drawn by E. M. Devine for $215 on the Ross Lumber Company, through the Hamilton Bank. He was tried before Judge Cowing for forgery in the second degree on April 30, 1906, and was defended by George M. Curtis.

Mingey pleaded that he had obtained authority to sign the check from Mr. Rose, but was convicted and was sentenced to eighteen months in State prison. The case was appealed, and two weeks ago a judgment was handed down by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, affirming the sentence of the lower court.

Mr. Curtis then applied to Judge O'Sullivan of General Sessions for a certificate of reasonable doubt, and obtained an order to show cause why a new trial should not be held on the ground that new evidence had been discovered.

A notice of stay of proceedings was also served upon Mr. Jerome and Sheriff Hayes, but this was immediately vacated. Mr. Jerome held that Judge O'Sullivan had no power to stay a decision of the Appellate Division. He pointed out that Section 528 of the Penal Code expressly forbids this.

Under these circumstances, Mingey made a motion for a new trial before Judge O'Sullivan. This was granted, and the matter was turned over to Judge Crain. The regular proceeding would have been to have a hearing in open court, but this did not please the Judge. He ordered the case to be brought before him in chambers yeaterday, a day on which the courts are not sitting.

The Assistant District Attorney, who had charge of the matter, had no expectation that it would be brought up on a Saturday, and was not present. Word was sent to him that the case was up, and as soon as he had ascertained the conditions he sent a messenger for Mr. Jerome.

Mr. Jerome immediately came down stairs, and as soon as he had reached the chambers of Judge Crain he entered a vigorous protest.

"I object," he said; "under Section 528 of the Penal Code you have no right to try this man in chambers."

A prolonged discussion with the Judge followed, and in the end the Judge gave way. When it was all settled Mr. Jerome said:

"The case will be tried in open court on Monday. That's all there is about it."

For some time there has been friction between the office of the District Attorney and the Judges of General Sessions. It is probable that the case of Daniel Sullivan, who, although he was an old offender and had several convictions of robbery against him, was let off on Friday with a sentence of two months, may come up again. Mr. Jerome contends that old offenders should have sterner justice meted out to them, and he will not tolerate political influence being successfully exerted to save them.

FOUND THROUGH THE TIMES.

Mrs. James Wood Reed, wife of a Southern banker and daughter of Minthorne Woolsey, Vice President of the Selma National Bank of Selma, Ala., who is making his Winter home at 250 West Ninety-fourth Street, lost four diamond and two plain gold rings, valued at $1,000, somewhere in Sixth Avenue, between Twentieth and Thirty-fourth Streets, a few days ago. She advertised the loss in THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A friend of the family, who reads THE TIMES regularly, noticed the announcement of Mrs. Reed's loss, and he connected it with the fact that he had heard that a colored woman had submitted some rings to a jeweler for valuation. The friend communicated with Mr. Woolsey, and the police were notified. The woman was found, gave up the jewels, claimed the reward, and was made happy.

"If it had not been for THE TIMES, my daughter would never have seen her jewels again," said Minthorne Woolsey yesterday.

Henry Clews to Debate Again.

Since his recent debate with Gaylord Wilshire, the Socialist, at Cooper Union Henry Clews has received many challenges to continue the discussion. Having decided convictions in favor of the capitalist system, Mr. Clews has now accepted a challenge of the Brooklyn Socialists. He will discuss present issues on Sunday afternoon, May 12, at 2:30 o'clock, in the Columbia Theatre, Brooklyn, with Prof. George R. Kirkpatrick of Albion College.

PEACE CONGRESS SEQUELS.

Many men many minds. We have published already some of the remonstrances of esteemed readers taking us to task for underestimating the Peace Congress, and to-day we print a most interesting London budget telling us that that same congress is hardly regarded with respect abroad. Indeed, instead of praising us for promoting the world's peace, our foreign friends plainly tell us that we are mischief makers, if not hypocrites. Our foreign policy, it seems, threatens the world, and our naval policy is at war with our professions of amity. It is all very well to have a President who preaches peace sermons, but does he not brandish a big stick? Admiral MANNEY furnishes us an interview telling us that we are building battleships carrying two fewer 12-inch guns than England's Dreadnought, and yet so much better planned that our broadsids fire is one gun heavier. Hence it seems that we are a "bumptious and warlike people," without the slightest pretensione as keepers of the world's dovecotes. We altogether refuse to identify the "ardent and ill-informed amateur" who rushed in where statesmen fear to tread, and who is advised to endow a Chair of History for his own instruction before attempting to influence the world's affairs. For such irreverence we have scant sympathy, and yet it ssrves to prove that others than ourselves differ from the good readers who thought our estimate of the Peace Congress's proceedings inadequate.

Not for a moment did we doubt the entire good faith of all concerned and the great weight of the aggregate membership. With all defects the gathering ranked a good second to The Hagus Congress itself, and the world might have been challenged to duplicate it without official support. Yet even while placing this high estimate upon its qualifications, and while wishing its aims every success, it is impossible not to see that its proceedings were characterized by no little colloquialism and impracticability. It seemed to us to lack that quality which it would have gained from a predominance of ths element which was conspicuous for its lack, that is, lawyers and men trained in public affairs. Take, for instance, Mr. CARNEGIE'S suggestion for an intsrnational police—to enforce what law? Mr. CARNEGIE'S suggestion is indeed aimed to remedy the chief defect of international law, that is, lack of sanction. Municipal law possesses the sanction of force, which Mr. CARNEGIE aimed to supply to international law. But ths municipal police enforce positive law, which everybody understands, while international law is hardly more than usage. It is at this point that municipal and international law divide, and that international law is weakest. Devotion to peace and arbitration in the abstract is entirely consistent with perception that any prudent nation before committing itself might well claim to know what are the laws to which it submits, and what the rules of procedure and the character of the Bench. Take, for instance, the lawsuit brought last week by a lady of Boston against King EDWARD for damages received while traveling over his Intercolonial Railway. The answer set up that the suit was contrary to the comity of nations. Why should King EDWARD permit himself to be sued when thsre is no court constituted for such cases, and when the law has not been declared? Then take the Drago or Calvo doctrine denying the right of navies to collect contractual debts—is it not evident that it is merely a doctrine, as yet, and that Mr. CARNEGIE'S international police would have doubtful status in supporting either side of the contention?

Of course it is not intended that there are no rules regulating the conduct of nations toward each other, and each other's subjects. There are many such rules, of all degrees of uniformity, and lacking in most other characteristics of what lawyers call law. It is evident that they are not international because they are not imposed upon nations by shy power, nor are executed by any power, and indeed are law at all only by mutual consent and observance. Europe's repudiation of the Drago doctrine, and King EDWARD'S refusal to be sued, illustrate that international law, so called, is law only so far as assented to. Yet there is a great body of common usage between nations to be found in statutes and treaties and the principles of morality and reason. A beginning might be made by the agreement upon a minimum to which the world should assent. The Statutes of the World should precede the Police of the World. The first result would be the creation of national consciences. As the sense of right and conscience grew there would be less for Mr. CARNEGIE'S police to do, and moral force would replace physical. The world has not yet learned the lesson exemplified by the United States for a century. There is no constitutional court, for instance, to take cognizance of the relations between England and Ireland as our Supreme Court regulates the relations between any two States of the Union. The inter-State, or we may say the intsrnational law, of the United States is an example to the world as potent as the Peace Congress. In this respect, at least, we practice what we preach.

THE POLICE TRANSFORMATION.

The reorganization of the Police Department under the authority of the Bingham bill has not come a moment too soon. It has long been evident that the police arm of the City Government was crippled, inefficient, and not to he depended on. With the increase in the number and the variety of the city's population it has become imperative thst the polics force should be kept at the highest point of discipline and effectiveness. It must, above all, be a trustworthy force, sound, honest, and subject to no other interest or influence than that of its orders and its duty. But it is notorious that an altogether too intimate relation has existed between the enforcers and the violators of the law. The great city has besn visibly getting beyond police control. The large number of reported assaults and burglaries has made men feel insecure in the streets and in their dwellings; regulations prescribed for the public peace and order have been violated and defied; conditions are going, and not very slowly going, from bad to worse.

It requires not only some knowledge of these conditions, but some imagination as well, to picture forth the possibilities of the reform Commissioner BINGHAM has so vigorously begun in exercising his new powers; authority is now centred in him, and he has made it felt. His men are on trial. They have been on trial before, but there is this difference, that now, if he finds them wanting, they will be replaced. It will make a world of difference to the crooks, the divekeepers, the pickpockets, the violators of the excise law, and all mannsr of offenders who have hitherto trusted, and not in vain, to arrangements secretly made for "protection" with the officers of ths law, of whom, in any well ordered community, they would stand in wholesome fear.

The municipal housecleaning begun in the Police Department will, we think, show a tendency to include other departments. There are a good many administrative nooks and corners where rigid inquiry would reveal pretty serious abuses—some of them, perhaps, serious enough to be sent to the Grand Jury. As ths Governor has pointed out, there is ample local authority for all needed investigation. A transformation similar to that now working in the Police Department may presently be observed in other branches of the municipal service.

FATE OF SOCIALISM IN JAPAN.

Greatness in nations—the power to do things and preserve the regard of the world—chiefly implies a respect for law, obedience to authority, and the maintenance of public order. In making the most of these attributes Japan has bsen singularly fortunate. Possibly alone among the nations of the world, her advancement has chiefly besn brought about by concessions made by those in power working downward and not by revolutionary movements from below. No "Reign of Terror" forced the Emperor to part with his traditionally God-given legislative powers, or coerced ths nobles to surrender their patents of nobility. What happens, therefore, whsn a body of Japanese inspired by the exalted aims of Occidental Socialism break laws, defy authority, and turn to destroy life and property in order to enforce their ideas that wealth, labor, and authority are inadequately divided? The rebsllion at the Ashio Copper Mines, near Nikko, serves as an eloquent answer.

These mines, the property of the Furukawa family, were equipped with the best modern machinery and gave employment to about 10,000 men. All known modern appliances, physical and mental, were employed to preserve ths health and lives of the operators and to make them happy in their work. Wages were regulated according to profits. Grievances of all sorts were adjusted by a committee of managers representing the property owners and of delegates elected by the men. Justice and tranquillity seemed permanently established at the Ashio Mines when operators from the Occident began to introduce the insidious doctrines of immature Socialism—the proletariat must organize and by force obtain a larger percentage of the profits; it must organize as a guarantee of its future supremacy.

The reply of the Furukawa family is memorable: They could permit no organization of employés which at any time might be used to ruin the business any more than the National Government could permit the presence of a rebel army ready to bring about a revolution the moment things did not go to suit it—neither an industrial concern nor a Government could tolerate a condition of armed neutrality on the part of its employés or citizens.

Then it was that Socialism determined to adopt a policy of force. The mining plant, the property of the Furukawa family, representing many millions, was blown up, the homes of the officials were destroyed, and members of their families murdered or driven into the mountains. Soon the proletariat was left in full possession of the ruins. The Socialistic organization suddenly found itself dissolved into a band of individuals each striving for individual mastery. Those few days witnesssd Japanese civilization reverting to its primary elements.

At length ths Government took a hand. Troops were sent. Law, authority, and public order were enforced by bullets and at ths point of the bayonet. Arbitration was not even hinted at. When these things had besn done, the troops repaired as best they could the damage, and the plant was restored out of the Furukawa's reserve fund.

The Ashio Copper Mine is again ready to be operated, but—and this is the most potent lesson of the whole matter—wages, reckoned, as formerly, on a percentage of the profits, will bs about 40 per cent. lower than they were, and the Furukawas still maintain their right to conduct their business under the law, insist on obedience to authority, and the maintenance of public order.

TRINITY CHURCH.

Every New Yorksr—or perhaps we had better revert to the nomenclature of FENIMORE COOPER, and say every "Manhattanese"—who has paid particular attention to the growth and development of this island must have read with much astonishment the official statement of the rector of Trinity concerning the income of Trinity Parish. In the first place, one was entitled to astonishment that the public statement should just now be made. There was a time, or rather there have been times, when "Trinity," with its ancient endowment, was held to be formidable to New York on account of ths immensity of its possessions. "Raids" were made upon it, raids which may be supposed to have been originally instigated by the desire to blackmail, but raids which commanded threatening support in the Legislature. Those raids wsre met in various ways. Forty years or so ago they were met by a statement from the already venerable JOHN A. DIX, then, if we remember aright, Treasurer of the parish of which his now venerable son was and is the rector, giving an estimate of the total value of ths endowment, and showing that Trinity, contrary to the common belief, was worth only some few millions. If, again, we remember aright, it was between six and seven. Everybody thought it was worth more. Everybody who was entitled to an opinion was quite sure that it ought to be worth more. But Gen. DIX'S statement may have been necessary at that tims to mitigate envy, and may have had that effect.

But, considering what the forty or so intervening years have done for Manhattan real estate in general, one does not quite see why the rector of Trinity should have been moved to put forward this present statement that the income of Trinity is only some three-quarters of a million. There is now no active envy of the magnitude of Trinity's holdings which it is necessary or desirable to appease or abate. If there were, Dr. DIX'S statement would abate it only by making envy give place to surprise. Although the present Treasurer of the parish does not pretend exactly to bound the parochial possessions, it is well understood that they are such as to constitute Trinity one of the largest landholders in New York. And everybody is entitled to say that the income stated by Dr. DIX, (the good faith of his statement if not its accuracy being, of course, admitted on all hands) shows that the domain of Trinity is the worst managed piece of real estate on Manhattan Island. It would be interesting to trace the history and ascertain the present value of an equally extensive tract divided among individual holders. We may be very sure that the aggregated income of these holders would be found to bs immensely greater than the income of Trinity, in spite of the enormous advantage that single ownership of so great a tract gives for securing increass of value. Dr. DIX'S piety, learning, and eloquence are not in the least in question. But the business sense of the management of Trinity, which can secure less than a million of income from the vast Trinity estate, is very much in question. And yet we seem to have heard a tradition that, when Dr. DIX was chosen rector of Trinity, over several of the clerical staff of the corporation who were superior to him in seniority and conspicuousness, the explanation was that, for the rectorship of Trinity, there was needed a "business man," and that he was supposed to fill that particular bill better than Dr. VINTON, or Dr. HAIGHT, or Dr. HIGBEE. Truly it seems that "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

In the past Trinity has had the assistance of the children of this world. One of these, a little over a century ago, had the bright idea of reclaiming the "Lispenard meadows," which were so worthless, as Dr. DIX himself has recorded in his history of the parish that a church of another denomination had refused to take them as a gift at the cost of fencing them in. The child of this world, whose name history does not retain, acquired this worthless swamp, laid out "Hudson Square," afterward known as St. John's Park, built St. John's Chapel, and, as Dr. DIX has also recorded, made the swamp the "court end" of the town, as it continued to be for more than a generation. That was one of the most important and successful real estate operations ever undertaken in New York, perhaps the most important and successful. But as fashion moved northward the successors of the able child of this world did nothing to arrest the decline of the quarter. On the contrary, they did everything to hasten it. Thsy might have kept their domain as a Bloomsbury. They let it degenerate into a Soho. Finally they killed the goose that had laid the golden eggs, or sold their birthright for a mess of pottage, whichever way you choose to put it, by selling St. John's Park, with its ancient trees unequaled in this country, to Commodore VANDERBILT for the purposes of a freight station, now in turn obsolete as such. Thereby they converted a great part of the Trinity estate into a slum, and into a very low and offensive slum, and gained for Trinity Church the reputation of being the worst landlord in New York. And the income of the corporation has dwindled, we are now authoritatively assured, to the three-quarters of a million, which, considering the size and the situation of the property, is "relatively derisory."

It seems plain that the child of this world should again be invoked to display the wisdom in his gencration which the children of light have so conspicuously lacked. It would very well pay the corporation, even now, to invoke the services of a competent "real estate man," to clothe him with power, and to pay him, say, a minimum of $100,000 a year, though ths right man would probably be better compensated by a commission on his "results." At any rate, the present condition of the parish, as to its "temporalities," indicates that Mrs. RUSSELL SAGE was well advised when she entirely refused to invest the savings of her late husband in "endowments."

RUSSIA IN REVOLUTION.

Nobody can read Mr. BONSAL'S graphic presentation of the Russia that now is, and compare it with his almost equally graphic reminiscences of the Russia that was only ten years ago, without being assured that the Russian revolution, liks other revolutions, does not go backward. It is the Japanese war that has made the difference. Following the rule that whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad, the crazy Grand Ducal ring, represented by ALEXIEFF, rushed upon their fate by forcing a foreign war in aid of tyranny at home. The popular delusion that the Russian "institution" was omnipotent abroad was the superstition which was needed to maintain its tyranny at homs. When it was borne in upon every man, woman, and child in all Russia that the autocracy had been shamefully beaten in a war of its own urging upon a people it affscted to despise, then the old Russia, ths Russia of tyranny and terror, passed irrevocably away, and the new and modern Russia was already "yeaning at the birth." The revolution had begun. And now Mr. BONSAL finds his "revolutionary literature" sadly passed by the Custom House officer, who, ten years ago, would have seized it and him and made trouble for ths American Embassy to extricate him from the results of his own temerity. It is a great transformation.

Manifestly, the Russia in which these things are happening can never revert to the condition of the Russia in which they could not possibly have happened. Manifestly, the dissolution of the first Duma was a "stroke of state" which it would take a veritable maniac to repeat, or to advise to be repeated, with the second. It is the autocracy, and not the revolution, which should most earnestly pray that the safety valve of Russian discontent should be kept open. The St. Petersburg correspondent of The London Times put the case very well whsn he declared the other day that until the Government came to an understanding with the "Moderate Centre," which is to say with the most conservative of the Progrssives, "there will be no assurance of the longevity of the Duma, with which the peaceful evolution of Russia is indissolubly bound up."

The word is with the Government. It has sometimes seemed that M. STOLYPIN had really risen to the height of this great argument and was able and willing to effect the modus vivendi between the old and the new, which his predecessors had either not desired or certainly had not accomplished. At other times he has seemed to be smitten with their judicial blindness. After such an act of liberalism as the submission of the budget to the discussion of the Duma, he has almost nullified its good effect by refusing to proclaim a prohibition of the trial of civilians by "field courts-martial," or by such a puerile piece of opposition as the refusal to allow the Duma to take the counsel of economic experts. Doubtless representatives of the people inexperienced in parliamentary institutions on the national ecale may indulge in wild demands and still wilder expressions, which a Russian martinet of the old régime would have felt bound to repress. But the hopes that have been entertained of STOLYPIN are based precisely on the belief that he was too large minded to play the part of such a martinet. It is his business not only to see for himself, but to make visible to the tottering Czar and the greedy Grand Dukes, that it is first of all in their own interests that he should be allowed to come to an understanding with the real representatives of the sane and sober part of the Russian people.

BOTHA IN LONDON.

Truly the whirligig of Time brings in his revenges. Of all the unlikelihoods the unlikeliest, eight short years ago, was that one of the Boer Generals would come to be ths pet and pride of London. Yet that extreme improbability is now the accomplishsd fact. It is a fact, to employ the trite phrase, "equally creditable to both parties." If the magnificent fight waged by the Boers against overwhelming odds had been successful, we may doubt whether the hospitality of the British metropolis would have been so ungrudging. But that, under modern conditions, could of course not be. If South Africa had been, ten years ago, practically as far from London as North America was a century and a quarter ago, then BOTHA'S "rebellion" might have succeeded like WASHINGTON'S, but then only.

But what is all to ths credit of Great Britain is that Gen. BOTHA goes to London, after these few years, as Premier of a British self-governing dependency. The political system which allows of the attainment of such a result within such a time is truly one of the glories of the British Empire. The only parallel to it is the reunion of the United States after the civil war. And that parallel is not exact. Our "period of Reconstruction" lasted much longer than the like period in South Africa. And long after the Southern States had been readmitted to their Constitutional status, the issues of the civil war were successfully invoked by certain Northern Republicans. Not until the Spanish war, that is to say, not until after a full generation after the civil war, was the perfect reunion effected which the reception of BOTHA in London as a British Premisr indicates to have been effected in the Transvaal within a decade.

AN IRISH CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

One of the most vexed and most difficult questions the Liberal Government of England has to deal with is that of university education in Ireland. Curiously enough, though the Liberal Party is on the whole decidedly more favorable to Irish wishee than the Unionist Party, the leading Unionists are prepared to go further toward satisfying Catholic sentiment than the Liberals. Indeed, The Spectator of London, which is by far the strongest of the Unionist weeklies, says:

Surely it would be much wiser to leave Dublin University exactly as it is, and to set up by its side a true Roman Catholic University which will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Roman Church in Ireland. We should like to see the representatives of Roman opinion—and these must necessarily be the Roman Archbishops and Bishops—given a blank sheet of paper on which to draw up their ideal university. That university we would endow from public funds as liberally as Trinity College. We trust that Mr. BALFOUR, as leader of the Opposition, will find it possible to tell the Government that if they will found a Roman Catholic University on these lines, they will meet with no sort of opposition, but rather support, from the official representatives of the Unionist Party.

Trinity College, Dublin, the most important institution of higher learning in Ireland, has for nearly seventy years been open to students without the religious tests that were enforced before 1840, but the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church have opposed the mixed instruction of Protestants and Catholics with the utmost energy. The Roman Catholics have supported largely by private gifts a university of their own, which receives a certain grant from the Government, but only a fraction of the income from the endowment available for Trinity. Just before giving up his post in Ireland to assume his duties in Washington Mr. BRYCE submitted a plan for the settlement of the university question, which was in the nature of a compromise between the two religious parties. It has mst with a good deal of opposition from both on the ground that it will tend to embitter rather than to assuage religious prejudices. The probabilities are that the Liberals will not try to deal conclusively with the matter at the present session, if at all. The essential difficulty, we imagine, lies in the "Nonconformist consciencs," which revolts at the notion of Liberal support for an avowedly Roman Catholic university. It is hardly to be doubtsd, however, that this is the only solution of a question which is at best an extremely thorny one.

Remarking upon the somewhat gratuitous assumption that it was the late JOHN SHERMAN (then Secretary of State) who assured Dr. VON HOLLEBEN, the German Ambassador, that we did not want the Philippines, the Philadelphia Record observes with much seriousness that such an action would indicate, that Mr. SHERMAN was of a "sound and disposing mind." The latter especially.

List of Prisoners Also.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your paper informs me this morning that President McGowan is to introduce a bill before the Board of Aldermen next Tuesday requesting Mayor McClellan to appeal to the British Government for the records of our municipality during Revolutionary times.

Would it not be a wise thing to ask for a list of the names of the prisoners of war in our city at that time? We have no such list in our State records, and it seems important that we should have such list. E. L. C.

"BURN THE CUSTOM HOUSES."

Louis Ehrich Suggests a Method of Advancing Universal Peace.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer attended nearly every session of the Peace Conference. It was like a sacred baptism in the hallowed waters of international good-will. Noble sentiments, persuasive arguments, practical suggestions were offered in profusion. And yet I cannot but feel that the most effective, most potent, and most pertinent msthod of securing world peace was overlooked. As a foundation for my proposition, I quote first from a speech delivered by the Hon. James Bryce to our Chamber of Commerce less than a month ago:

"The more trade countries have with one another the better. It is in the order of nature that every country should produce that which it can produce best and can produce most cheaply, and should send it to every other country. It is in the order of nature that international trade should exist, and it is also in the order of civilization. It is also in the interest of peace. It is in the interest of confidence. The more each takes and the more each gives the better it is for both and the bettsr it is for the confidence of the world."

I quote furthsr from an address delivered in this city not many weeks ago by the Hon. Elihu Root, in which he explained the causes which had developed the solidarity of our National life:

"The second great influence has been the knitting togetber in ties of common interest of the people forming the once separate communities through the working of free trade among the States. Never was a concession dictated by enlightened judgment for the common benefit more richly repaid than that by which the States surrendered in the Federal Constitution the right to lay imposts or duties on imports or exports without the consent of Congress. • • • To it we owe in a high degree the constant drawing together of all parts of our vast and diversified country in the bands of common interest and in the improving good understanding and kindly feeling of frequent intercourse."

The thought expressed in these quotations contains the kernel of my proposal. If you want to draw mankind together, if you wish to remove the division lines between the nations, if you are eager to base the world on a foundation of indusirial justice, if you desire to create a condition which will render war clearly and manifestly opposed to international self-interest—then burn all the Custom Houses of the world! Abolish the anti-social method of raising ths revenues of Government by a tax on imports. Make all trade free—and make man veritably free—free, without barrier or hindrance, to exchange the product of his hand or of his brain with the product of every other man on the planet! Here is a fruitful field which invites the co-operation of the statesman, of the reformer, and of every lover of his race! This is the path which offers the greatest forward step in civilization. Fres trade, absolute free trade, would do more to lighten the burdens of life, more to equalize the conditions of mankind, more to develop that internal content which is one of the best guarantees for external concord, and more, directly and indirectly, to secure the blessings of permanent peace than any other influence or agency on earth. The abolition of the world's industrial shackles is no visionary dream. Some high-hearted leader, filled with the faith and steadfastness of a Garrison, will yet rouse mankind to effect the world emancipation of commerce. The best international peace congress would be an international congress for absolute free trade.

HEAT IN COAL ASHES.

Inventor Geyer Says He'll Prove Today That Prof. Bellew Is Wrong.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your Friday paper there was published an interview with Prof. Bellew of Columbia University, in which he says:

There is absolutely no potential heat stored up in ashes. To a large exient ashes represent only the clay and salt that got mixed some millions of years ago with the decaying coal-producing vegetation of the carboniforous age.

The following invitation has been sent to Prof. Bellew:

Mr. James W. Geyer presents his compliments to Prof. Bellew, and requests that he be present in the boiler room of the Park Avenue Hotel, New York City, at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, April 21, where a practical demonstration will be given of the potentiality of a certain chemical agent in releasing the oxygen and hydrogen at the point of combustion, with coal ashes as a vehicle, and in increasing the force and duration of the heat units.

With due respect to Prof. Bellew's chemical knowledge, I claim that I have discovered an agent whereby the ashes of anthracite coal can be utilized in the proportion of two-thirds ashes to one-third coal, and produce a hotter and more lasting fire than pure coal, and so reduce the cost of this class of fuel 66 2-3 per cent.

My discovery has no connection, immediate or remote, with the alleged chemical compound employed by John Ellmore of Altoona, Penn., or by any other individual or corporation. My experimenting began ssven years ago, and I believe I have brought it to a state of complete perfection.

Faker and Fakir.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why "fakir" instead of "faker"? The latter is evidently the word you wish to use, as it implies one who fakes, a trickster. A fakir (pronounced fa-keer) is a holy man, one of an order of religious beggars; a poor man, and an ascetic. This is hardly the meaning Mr. Wadsworth meant to convey.

On the same page appears thie line: "Smith will contest rumors." That's rather below THE TIMES'S standard, is it not?

To go back to "fakir"; one might just as well write "writir" or "bakir" when one who "writes" or one who "bakes" is meant, and the Century or Standard Dictionary will show this very clearly.

SHAKESPEARE.

(Born about April 23, 1564.)

Hail! Shakespeare, master mind of minds,
The pattern and provider for all other kinds,
The source of plunder for a host of pens,
The great observer, the wide-angle lens
That took in all the encircling sphere
Of mortal and immortal hope and fear;
Nothing escaped you; the greatest and the least
Were gathered up and pictured for the feast
That in these days is no less fitting fare
Than when, for other tastes, you set it there.
We offer nothing in return; we take
What you have given to us, bread and cake
And meat and wine, and, fattening, we say:
"There is one Bill impossible to pay."

WANTS ROOSEVELT TO SELECT BRYAN

Or Bryan to Choose Roosevelt—It's All One to John Temple Graves.

SO EITHER IS PRESIDENT

Southern Editor at Chicago Dinner Enlarges on His Idea of Nebraskan Nominating New Yorker.

CHICAGO, April 20.—"Bryan and Roosevelt, the two greatest in all the world." John Temple Graves of Atlanta, Ga., thus approached the close of his speech to-night at the twenty-seventh annual banquet of the Iroquois Club on "The Regeneration of Parties." Following the tribute paid to Mr. Bryan and President Roosevelt, the speaker said: "One word from Bryan would send Roosevelt omnipotent to the White House. One word from Roosevelt would just as surely make Bryan President and clothe him with the power for reform." Mr. Graves's speech in part was as follows.

"What conservative Democrat, save Alton B. Parker with his confreres, has been strong enough to put Bryan to indignity and Hearst to shame? What Republican is strong enough to reduce the irrepressible Roosevelt to the ranks of the orthodox in privilege? And what Republican, save Roosevelt, can coerce the thronged magnates of the trusts to a proper humility?

"Mr. Bryan is great because in all his life he has never feared or hesitated to champion his convictions against his party and to put them in balance against his personal intcrest. He is the first Democrat of the world to-day.

"Mr. Roosevelt has grown great because he, too, has risen above the partisan. Born and prospered in the camps of privilege, he came with a brave heart and an open mind to Washington. He followed orthodoxy in the wake of his party and in the path of his predecessor. But one day William R. Hearst flung at his feet an array of unanswerable statistics to prove the baneful existence and iniquity of the trusts. The challenge rang against a brave man's shield, and Theodore Roosevelt was never the same man again. He buckled on his sword and went forth to war with the merger of those northern railroads under Hill and Harriman. He has never sheathed since then the blade he bared in our Democratic battle against corporate greed and profit.

"There they are, the two greatest men in all the world. By the record they stand each for righteousness and justice everywhere. They are the unmatched champions of the people in the supremest crisis of the people's need. Democratic Republican, or Republican Democrat, it matters not. They are American statesmen and patriots in every pulse. One or the other of these men should establish order and justice in this crisis of our economic life. One or the other should be the President and pilot of the people in these tremendous times. Either is worthy. Each deserves. Which can be?

"If it was never true before in all our history it is true to-day that these two men leading opposite factions have on their lips the power to change the face of parties and to regencrate the Republic's life. One word from Bryan would send Roosevelt omnipotent to the White House. One word from Roosevelt would just as surely make Bryan President and clothe him with the power for reform. Roosevelt could elect Bryan almost as easily as Bryan could re-elect Roosevelt. Never was such power, never such opportunities, and never such responsibility in four American hands before.

"The obligation is even upon each.

"Will either rise to the great height which destiny has builded them? I do not know—nor do you. We only know that the vast occasion waits. I have pointed my own hero to his opportunity. If he will not grasp it, let us hope the other may.

"If Bryan from defeat will not retwine the laurel upon Roosevelt's conquering brow, then from the great height of victory let Roosevelt reach down to lift the patriot Bryan up to power and to duty."

Other speakers of the evening were Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Omaha, Ben F. Snively of Fort Wayne, and Edwin M. Grout of Brooklyn.

BIG CONFERENCE ON TRUSTS.

Fifteen Governors of States Will Attend May Meeting in Chicago.

Fifteeen Governors have accepted the invitation of the National Civic Federation to name delegates to attend the National Conference on Combinations and Trusts in Chicago on May 28-31. The acceptances of Gov. Hughes of New York, Gov. Cummins of Iowa, Gov. Folk of Missouri, Gov. Warner of Michigan, Gov. Davidson of Wisconsin, and Gov. Cutler of Utah were received yesterday.

This conference will discuss:

Governmental power over corporations engaged in inter-State commerce; the division of power under the Constitution between the Nation and the State; power concurrent in Nation and State.

How should the corporation be constructed? Should there be National corporation as well as State? The basis of capitalization of corporations, their internal control; provisions looking to the protection of investors and the stockholders as well as fair dealing with the public; distinction between public service and other corporations.

IMPIOUS TRUST, SAYS JUDGE.

Trustees of God's Bible School Denounced by Court.

CINCINNATI, April 20.—The Trustees of God's Bible School and Missionary Training Home were denounced by Judge Pfleger in the Common Pleas Court today, although he at the same time denied an application for the appointment of a receiver for the Bible School. Two petitions had been filed by contributors and supporters of the school, one for the removal of the Trustees and the other for the appointment of a receiver, and both were denied.

Regarding a declaration made by the Trustees that they are not answerable to any human agency, but that their compact is between their conscience and God, the court says:

"But for their evident sincerity in their beliefs this could well be demoninated sacrilege, if not blasphemy, and might tempt the court to speedily wind up such an impious trust."

Charges of misappropriation of funds were declared not to have been sustained, as also were reflections on the methods of the Trustees.

Loyal Wuerzburger Protests.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having read the article on X-Rays in your esteemed journal of the 14th inst., I wish to protest against the term "obscure," which appears in the following sentence: "When twelve years ago a professor, then unknown to fame, who had been experimenting for years in an 'obscure' institution in remote Bavaria, discovered a new light."

The institution to which your correspondent gives the "glittering adjective" "obscure" is the University of Wuerzburg, and this Alma Mater has been and is still to-day one of the most famous universities of Germany. It is the Alma Julia, (name of the university,) where many of our illustrious teachers, whose names are looked on as household names in science, have made their fame through their works and researches. Let me just mention a few. Herr von Bergman, whose demise just took place, taught in Wuerzburg at the end of the seventies, at the same period Virchow, Gerhard, Koelliker, and others were professors. Wuerzburg, and to-day lives in that city a specialist for diseases of the stomach, Geheimrat Professor von Leube, to whom annually scores of Americans make their pilgrimage for their health sake. And in a few days American scientists will welcome to these shores one of the greatest ophthalmologists the world knows, Dr. Karl Hess, who is professor at Wuerzburg.

I found it necessary to lodge this protest because I considered the term "obscure" an insult to the great university as well as to the City of Wuerzburg, of which city I proudly call myself a son.

HARRY E. OPPENHEIMER.

St. Louis, Mo., April 18, 1907.

PEPLE NOW WANTS MANAGER ENJOINED

Says Comstock Has Cheapened "The Love Route" by Putting It in Stock.

THE TITLE ALSO CHANGED

Play Was Originally Called "The Hornet's Nest"—Comstock Denies Breaking His Contract.

Another playwright has applied to the Supreme Court for an injunction to prevent what he considers an injurious use of one of his dramas. Edward H. Peple, author of "The Prince Chap" and other plays, complains that Ray Comstock, under whose management "The Love Route" was produced and who still controls the play, is detracting from the value of the piece by leasing it for production to stock companies.

Mr. Peple, in the suit filed yesterday, asserts that when an author has sold to a manager the exclusive right to one of his plays, the manager has no right to produce the play in stock houses in its period of production in first-class houses as a regularly organized attraction. Mr. Peple, in the complaint drawn by his attorney, Nathaniel Cohen, also declares that a manager has no right to change the original title of a play to any title that he may think more suitable.

According to the contract between Peple and Ray Comstock, the author gave to the manager the sole and exclusive right to produce his play, "The Hornet's Nest," in the United States, Canada, and Cuba. At the time of the first production at the Garrick Theatre, Chicago, last August, the title of "The Hornet's Nest" was changed to "The Love Route."

Peple declares that it was agreed the play should not be published, but should be retained in manuscript form to be used only for productions by Comstock. He contends that, contrary to this agreement, Comstock has licensed others to produce the play in stock theatres.

Mr. Comstock in discussing the suit said:

"I have done nothing that my contract does not permit me to do. After I paid the first $1,000 in royalties on a 5 per cent. basis I had the exclusive right to the play so long as I should continue to pay royalties regularly whenever the play was performed.

"The original production, which ran for five weeks at the Lincoln Square Theatre beginning on Oct. 29, was discontinued in Washington on Feb. 23 because we had exhausted all the desirable time then available in the Shubert houses, through which I book. I am already booking a route for another regular company next season.

"In the meantime, rather than let the play lie idle, I have leased it to stock companies in cities which my regular company will be unable to visit. For instance, I have leased it to Frisco and Los Angeles where the Shubert theatres have no theatres. I should also like to have it done here by the Proctor stock companies, because I feel that the value of the play as a regularly New York production is exhausted. I shall not lease the play to any stock company in any city where I expect to book the regular production.

"With regard to changing the name of the play, Mr. Peple objected to it at first, but finally consented. I think that 'The Love Route' is a better name than 'The Hornet's Nest.'"

Nathaniel Cohen says that injunctions will be obtained against stock companies attempting to produce the play.

TOLSTOY BY MISS HARNED.

She Plays In a Stage Version of "Anna Karenina."

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 20.—Miss Virginia Harned this afternon brought out at the Hyperion Theatre the stage version of Tolstoy's novel "Anna Karenina," under the stage title "The Great Question." Many members of the Yale Faculty were in the audience.

The drama as presented was translated from the French dramatization of Tolstoy's novel made by Edmond Gulraud and adapted by Thomas William Broadhurst. The lines of the novel are not closely followed. Miss Harned said that the rôle was the most emotional she had essayed. Maud Granger, Lillian Paige, Kitty Blanchard, Ann Wallington, Margaret Dunn, Albert Brunning, Corley Thomas, William Courtney, and Bertrim Gadsky were in the cast.

WHAT'S A SACRED CONCERT?

Not an Elephant, Says the Prosecutor of Hammerstein's.

There was lots of fun yesterday when ex-Justice Abraham R. Lawrence, sitting as referee at 125 Broadway, continued the hearing on the revocation of the license granted to William Hammerstein for the Victoria Theatre. The proceedings are in the nature of a test, the license expiring on May 1. The referee observed that he did not think the matter could be properly investigated before the expiration of the license.

The first witness was August Kimmel of the Federation of Church Clubs, who volunteered to get information as to alleged violations of the Sunday law at the Victoria Theatre. He said that the only thing he considered improper in the performance he attended was a song suggesting the Caruso incident.

"What was the nature of the Church Club's objection to the Sunday night performances?" asked counsel.

"They wanted a high-class performance," replied the witness.

"They do not consider Sunday night performances objectionable?"

"No. They only want first-class performances. The bicycle riders were not up to the standard, the girl who sang the Caruso song had no voice, and I have seen better shows than that. It was not a sacred concert, but only an ordinary vaudeville show."

"What else did you think objectionable?"

"The elephant was not a sacred concert," declared the witness.

Asked why Hammerstein's was picked out for prosecution, he replied: "I don't know. I supposed that evidence was being obtained against other theatres. They have better shows at other theatres. I saw a better Sunday night performance at the Grand Opera House."

William Hammerstein, when called to testify, was instructed by his attorney not to answer questions because he was a defendant and subject to penalty. The hearing will be continued next Thursday.

Margaret Wycherly's New Play.

The Shuberts announced yesterday that Margaret Wycherly would come to the Majestic Theatre on Monday, April 29, following Cyril Scott in "The Prince Chap." Miss Wycherly will appear in Bayard Veiller's four-act drama, "The Primrose Path." The play is a modern drama, with the first act in Paris and the other three acts in New York. Miss Wycherly, who is remembered for her appearances in the Yeats plays three seasons ago, will impersonate an artist's model.

Bishop Gives His Portrait to be Sold.

Bishop Potter will be the guest of honor at the next entertainment to be given by the Actors' Church Alliance in St. Chrysostom's Parish Hall on April 25. He will also present his portrait, framed, to be sold in aid of the Actors' Fund Fair at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Fritzi Scheff Convalescent.

Fritzi Scheff, who is now convalescing from her recent serious illness, took her first drive in the Park yesterday. She is still very weak, but the physicians think that her progress toward recovery will now be speedy.

CONRIED'S HOUSE FOR SALE.

And the Rumor Is Strong That He Won't Return to Active Work Here.

The rumor was strong on Broadway yesterday that Heinrich Conried would not return to the directorship of the Metropolitan Opera House. Simultaneously with the announcement that his house in West Seventy-first Street is for sale, another rumor floated across the Atlantic to the effect that Albert Carré, at present director of the Opera Comique in Paris, is to be his successor, with Felix Mottl to assist in the presentation of the German works.

Mr. Conried has already relinquished the management of the Irving Place Theatre. There is also now a rumor to the effect that he will not control the destinies of the New Theatre. It is said that the impresario intends to purchase a house abroad, possibly near Vienna, and that he will spend most of his time there. Even his best friends scarcely hope, it is said, that he will be well enough to return next season to the onerous duties of directorship.

It is understood that the Directors of the Opera House have no objection to Mr. Conried remaining in office if he keeps his strength, but they do not wish to see another Winter pass as the last has, with the manager rarely in the opera house.

LAST TIME FOR "CARMEN."

Calve and Dalmorès Better Than Ever Before This Season.

"Carmen" has had a round twenty performances in New York this season, counting that given at the Metropolitan and nineteen at the Manhattan. The Bizet opera was given for the last time this year at the latter house yesterday afternoon to one of the largest audiences the theatre has held.

Calvé sang the title rôle, and very much better both in voice and action than at her first performance of the part this season. According to her plans as already announced she will not be heard in opera again in New York very soon.

Practically all the members of the cast made their farewell appearances for this season. Charles Dalmorès, best of Don Josés, was in excellent voice and sang the flower song with thrilling effect. Miss Zeppilli was a charming Micaela; Miss Trentini sang Frasquita, and Miss Severina Mercedes; Mr. Ancona was the Toreador. Mr. Campanini conducted.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR DEPARTS.

Nearly Killed with Kindness Here, He Says—Didn't Criticise Our Music.

Sir Edward Elgar, the most famous of English composers, sailed away yesterday on the Campania. He came here two months ago to conduct performances of his "The Kingdom," and "The Apostles," with the New York Oratorio Society, and since then has made a tour of several of the large cities.

"I have had the best sort of a time," he said, and have nearly been killed with kindness. It has been suggested to me that I write an opera. I have received this suggestion so often that I think in the end I shall probably be forced to do it. Some of the papers have quoted me as criticising American music. That is something I have not talked about at all. I have too many good friends among American composers to care to discuss their work."

A Double Song Recital.

A song recital was given in Mendelssohn Hall last night by Frances Van Veen and William Lee. Miss Van Veen sang the waltz song from "Romeo et Juliette," an air from "Le Cid," Delibes's "Les Filles de Cadiz," the jewel song from "Faust," and a duet from "Don Giovanni" with Mr. Lee. Mr. Lee also sang an air from "Tannhäuser" and two short songs. They were assisted by Gustav Dannreuther, violinist; Leo L. Leventritt, baritone, and Willis H. Alling, organist and accompanist.

D. A. R. INVESTMENTS.

Society Practically Approves Purchase of Railroad Securities.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—At the session of the Daughters of the American Revolution to-day the seal of approval was put indirectly upon the action of the Committee on Finance in purchasing about $24,000 worth of railroad bonds with the funds of the society as an investment. The financial investments of the society have been a bone of contention for some time, it being charged by the Treasurer General, Mrs. Davis, that the transactions amounted to "insecure speculation." She recommended that hereafter only Government bonds be purchased.

The recommendation that only Government bonds be purchased in the future was disposed of by the committee recommending to the Congress the approval of the report of the Finance Committee regarding the investments of the society's funds. The recommendation was accepted, and this is taken to mean that the Finance Committee may hereafter purchase railroad bonds in its discretion.

The recommendation of the Treasurer General that she be made a member of the Committee on Finance, she having stated in her report that her advice was not sought in the purchase of the bonds, was not approved.

SNAPSHOT A WHALE.

Passengers on the Moltke Had a Novel Experience at Sea.

The steamship Moltke of the Hamburg-American Line, which arrived yesterday from Naples, passed through a severe storm on Thursday while nearing port. The wind struck the vessel with hurricane force and was accompanied by a short, choppy sea.

The Moltke returns after a Mediterranean trip, and about seventy passengers made the round trip. They had the opportunity of photographing a whale. On April 13, when the vessel was passing between St. George and Pico Islands, the Azores, Capt. Dempwolf made out four men in a rowboat plying the oars like mad. In spite of their vigorous work they were making but little progress, and the skipper, believing that they were in distress, moved in closer to them. When they neared the man in the small boat those on the ship saw they had a whale in tow. It was a dead one, it was true, but the sight was a novel one to the Moltke's passengers, and they gathered on deck to take snapshots of the monster.

"AIDA" CLOSES THE MANHATTAN

SAYS THE FIGHT IS WON

Impresario Declares He Winds Up with a Profit and Has Great Plans for Next Season.

The first season of the Manhattan Opera House closed last night with a performance of "Aida." The theatre was packed, every available seat being taken, and the standing room was filled to the last inch.

After the second act a large silver loving cup was presented on the stage to Mr. Hammerstein by the artists, Mr. Campanini making the presentation speech.

"I regret that I cannot make a long speech," said the conductor, "because I do not speak English, but I am happy to present this cup to you in the name of the artists of your company. Please accept it as a token of our esteem and with our best wishes for the future."

Then the applause broke loose, and the enthusiasm knew no bounds until at last Mr. Hammerstein, backed by all the artists who had sung, advanced to the footlights and said:

"I was not sure of my position when I stood on these boards five months ago, when I was starting an Opera House without the aid of society. I found soon after that there was no regular opera-going public, and I had to make one. In the first few weeks sometimes there was not over $1,500 a night in the house, but I convinced the people that I was doing the right thing by them, that I had no commercial aim in view, and I made a public which wanted to hear grand opera sung in the best manner.

"Other men would have been discouraged by the lack of support, but I was not. I went ahead and did the best I could, with the result that I am ending the season with the balance on the profit side.

"I am going abroad in a few weeks to engage artists to sing here next year—"

"Yes, Mr. Campanini is coming back. I want him most of all. I am going to spend all the money I have earned in an attempt to make this the most wonderful opera house in the world. Think of it, New York is the only city in the world which can support two opera houses of the first rank. The other one is certainly established [laughter], and this one is, too. [Applause.] And the people who come here come here for the opera. I want no others. I am not trying to establish a society clientele.

"My success, you will find, will be the success of every citizen of New York, for it will increase the value of real estate. Every successful house of amusement on this island will draw so many people to New York that there will be an increase in the price of land values. Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your support and hope to see you again next year."

Then the impresario retired amid great applause.

Mr. Sammarco appeared for the first time this season in the rôle of Amonasro in a wonderful make-up. He gave the part great dramatic force, and his voice counted for much in the ensemble. The other singers were familiar in their parts. Mme. Russ, de Cisneros, and Messrs. Bassi, Arimondi, Muguoz, and Tecchi all sang.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Joseph Alfred Throckmorton.

Joseph Alfred Throcknorton, President of the Second National Bank of Red Bank and one of the wealthiest residents of Eastern New Jersey, died of stomach trouble yesterday morning at his home at Red Bank, aged 80 years. He was a son of Edmund Throckmorton, and was born at Red Bank in 1827. After being educated at Elizabeth he engaged in the fur business in Tennessee.

In 1849 he went to the California gold fields and was a miner for seven years. Returning to Red Bank he embarked in the lumber business, in which he had been ever since. When the First National Bank was organized he was made one of its Directors, a few years later he was elected President of the Second National Bank. He was also a Director of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Shrewsbury.

He early was an old-line Whig, and on the organization of the Republican Party became a warm partisan in its cause. He was frequently a delegate to State and county conventions, but never sought political honor for himself.

Mr. Throckmorton was a bachelor and noted for his many charities. His brother, T. W. Throckmorton of Red Bank, has been critically ill for several months, and his death is looked for any day.

Miss Armide Smith.

Miss Armide Smith, a daughter of the late Murray Smith of New York and Mobile, died suddenly of appendicitis on Friday. She was the only unmarried sister of Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont and Mrs. Virginia Tiffany and the aunt of the Duchess of Marlborough, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Harold Vanderbilt.

Her father, the late Murray Smith, came from an old Virginia family related to the Stirlings of Scotland. He was a well-known broker in New York, and a member of the Union Club. For many years he lived in Mobile. His wife was the daughter of the late John Desha of Huguenot stock and her mother was a Miss Shelby of Tennessee. The Deshas were also from the same State.

Miss Smith had a large circle of friends to whom her sudden death was a great shock. She cared little for society, and her entire life was spent in good works and charities. She was prominent in church matters, and at the time of her death was a member of the congregation of St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church. She established a rest home for young women at Seabright five years ago, and was also connected with many other charities.

At the death of her sister, the Countess de Fontenilliat, Miss Smith had the custody of her son, who is now at school in Garden City. O. H. P. Belmont is his other guardian. The funeral services of Miss Smith will take place from St. James's Church to-morrow morning.

The Rev. David Young.

NEW ORLEANS, April 20.—The Rev. David Young, Vice President of the colored Baptist Convention, died here yesterday, aged 70. After the civil war Young left a plantation up the Mississippi River and turned to politics. He became a member of the Louisiana Legislature, was a delegate to several Republican National Conventions, and made himself a power among the Southern negroes. In 1877, upon the overthrow of the negro government in Louisiana, Young was indicted for the embezzlement of the school fund of his parish, but the case was dismissed under the Hayes compromise. Young then left politics for the Church.

Rear Admiral J. B. Redfield.

Rear Admiral J. Bayard Redfield, who in the days of his active service was one of the best-known Paymasters in the United States Navy, died at 248 West 105th Street on Friday. He was born at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., in 1842, and entered the navy as a Paymaster's clerk on board the old Circassian in 1862. He served all over the world, being at different times connected with the Atlantic, European, and Asiatic fleets, as well as General Storekeeper in Norfolk in 1890, and later at Chicago. The burial, which will be private, will be at Lockport, N. Y.

Funeral of Mrs. Jessie B. Bangs.

Funeral services were held yesterday afternoon for Mrs. Jessie B. Bangs, who died at her home, 11 Monroe Place, Brooklyn, on Thursday. Mrs. Bangs was the wife of Charles W. Bangs, a well-known Manhattan lawyer, and a sister of Flamen B. Candler, a law partner of Col. William Jay. She became seriously ill on her return with her husband from a trip around the world three weeks ago. She was a member of an old Brooklyn family and prominent in society.

SAMUEL B. DOD DEAD.

He Was a Financier, a Clergyman, and an Educator and Artist.

Samuel Bayard Dod, the oldest Trustee of Princeton University, and ever since he established Stevens Institute, Hoboken, President of the Board of Trustees of the latter college, died at his home in Scotland Street, South Orange, N. J., on Friday night, of heart disease. He was the founder of Seabright, N. J., organizer of the Hudson Trust Company, and President of the First National Bank of Hoboken.

At various times Mr. Dod had been President of the Hudson Street Railway Company, the Hoboken ferry, and gas and water companies. He was a writer, traveler, painter, etcher, and accomplished musician, and, until he became executor of the vast Stevens estate in Hoboken in 1869, was a Presbyterian clergyman. He belonged at the time of his death to the Presbytery of Morris and Orange, and he was President of the First Presbyterian Church, South Orange.

He gave large sums of money anonymously and assisted many young men to positions of responsibility. Every graduate of Stevens received his diploma from Mr. Dod's hand.

Mr. Dod was born in Princeton, sixty-eight years ago, and was a son of Prof. Albert B. Dod, a noted mathematician. He was educated at the university, graduating in 1858. He studied in Berlin University and then came to Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained and took charge of a church at Monticello, N. Y., and then in Wilkesharre, Penn., where he remained until 1869. He was then appointed executor of the Stevens estate.

The matter of the erection of Stevens Institute, which was provided for in the Stevens will, was placed in the hands of Mr. Dod. With his sister, Mrs. Stevens, he donated the mathematical chair in Princeton University in honor of their father. Mr. Dod was President of the National bank in Hoboken at the time of the panic of 1893, and he was also interested in the ferry, water, and gas companies and the Hoboken Trust Company. He weathered the storm, but the strain told severely on his health, and he soon after retired from many of these positions.

As an author Mr. Dod was known as the writer of "Stubble or Wheat" and "Highland Chronicle." He wrote in the Scotch vernacular, although he had never been in Scotland. He wrote and painted for recreation, and even painted the borders and ceiling decoration in his fine South Orange home. He planned his own home in Hoboken, and that of his father-in-law, Prof. Edward Wall, in that city.

He designed several North River ferryboats while he was President of the Hoboken Ferry Company. Mr. Dod leaves a widow, who was Miss Eleanor Wall, daughter of Prof. Wall, and three daughters by his first wife.

DEATH OF G. W. RODERICK.

With His Passing All but One of McKane's Counsel Have Expired.

The death of George W. Roderick has recalled to the minds of Brooklynites the fact that all but one of the lawyers for the defence in the famous Gravesend election fraude case in 1893 died within the last few years. Col. James, who was chief counselor; ex-District Attorney Foster L. Backus, James W. Glendenning, and now Mr. Roderick have passed away. Of the chief defendants in the case which made political history in Kings County, McKane and ex-Judge Richard Newton are dead, Kenny Sutherland surviving. Ex-Judge James Troy is the only one of the McKane counsel still living.

George W. Roderick, who was one of the best known members of the Brooklyn bar, was born in that borough in 1852. After graduating from school he entered the law offices of Morris & Pearsall in Brooklyn and was admitted to practice in 1874. For ten years he was in partnership with Alexander T. Carpenter. Mr. Roderick figured as counsel in many important cases in Brooklyn, but his most famous trial was that of the late John Y. McKane and the latter's political lieutenants for crimes against the election law. Mr. Roderick was a strong factor in the defense, which, however, was unsuccessful, McKane being convicted and sent to Sing Sing. The old Gravesend boss died soon after his release from prison. Mr. Roderick was for a number of years counsel for the Brooklyn, Bath Beach & Coney Island Railroad Company. He was a member of the Aurora Grata Club, the Long Island Wheelmen, Kismet Temple of the Mystic Shrine, the Knights of Honor, and the Royal Arcanum. His home was at 321 Park Place.

"THERE'S A REASON."

GEN. WILSON TO WED MRS. M. H. NICHOLSON

Widow of Admiral Nicholson, a War-Time Friend, to be His Bride.

GEN. MILES FOR BEST MAN

News Was to be Kept Secret Till After the Honeymoon, but Friends Gave It Away.

Gen. James Grant Wilson, 74 years old, editor, author, lecturer, soldier, is to marry on May 16 Mrs. Mary H. Nicholson, widow of Admiral Nicholson, who served with Farragut at New Orleans and who was an intimate friend of Gen. Wilson for many years. The wedding is to be a quiet one on account of the death of a brother of Mrs. Nicholson. It is to take place at her home, 157 West Seventy-ninth Street. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, an intimate friend of Gen. Wilson, is to be best man.

As the wedding was planned to be a very quiet one because Mrs. Nicholson was in mourning, no public anouncement was made of it. A few days ago, however, Gen. Wilson went to Philadelphia to address the Clover Club. There he met Gen. Miles and several other old army friends. The news about the coming marriage came from there.

Gen. Wilson, who lives at the Buckingham Hotel, was seen there last night. He was disappointed that the story had become known, saying that he and Mrs. Nicholson had intended marrying, making a trip through the South, and announcing the wedding at Baltimore on the way back. He said that the marriage was an open secret among the friends of himself and Mrs. Nicholson, but not to the public.

"Mrs. Nicholson is about twenty years younger than I am," said the General last night. She has no children. She is a member of the Martin family of Maryland and is related to the well-known Welsh family of Philadelphia. Gen. Wilson has one daughter, Miss Wilson, who is now abroad.

Gen. Wilson and Admiral Nicholson were war-time friends. The former, having put down "The Chicago Record," a journal of arts and literature, which he had established, went into the Union Army as a Major of the Fifteenth Cavalry, Illinois. He served with Grant in the famous Vicksburg campaign, being then a Colonel on his staff. Because of his long service with and intimate knowledge of Grant he wrote a life of Gen. Grant in 1897 and has delivered many lectures dealing with the life. He was while with Grant that Gen. Wilson met Admiral Nicholson, who was with Farragut.

"I can't see that it is the business of the public as to what my age is," said Gen. Wilson last night, "nor what is the age of Mrs. Nicholson. We are satisfied."

After the wedding in May the General and Mrs. Wilson will visit the South, stopping at the Jamestown Exposition.

It requires nearly a column in "Who's Who in America" to tell what Gen. Wilson has done in his seventy-four years. He was born at College Hill, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the son of the poet-publisher William W. Wilson. He resigned from the army in 1865 with the rank of Brigadier General, and has since been engaged in literary pursuits. He married in 1869 Miss Cogswell, a descendant of Mme. Bayard, sister of Gov. Petrus Stuyvesant.

He is responsible for the statue of Columbus in Central Park. He was dining with Alfonso XII, King of Spain, when he said to the King that he would see that a replica of the famous Columbus statue in the Prato in Madrid should be made for America if the King would come over and unveil it. The deal was made.

The replica was made for Central Park, but before its completion the King died. The Queen Regent started on the way, the Duke of Veragua, descendant of Columbus, to unveil the statue. The ship had to stop six weeks at Cadiz for repairs and the Duke went back. Vice President Stevenson unveiled the statue in 1892. But the Queen Regent knighted Gen. Wilson, making him a Chevalier of the Order of Isabella the Catholic.

He is also responsible for the bronze statue of the poet Halleck in Central Park. He edited an edition of Halleck's works.

These are some of the positions he now holds or has held: President of the New York Genenlogical and Biographical Society, American Authors' Guild and the American Ethnological Society; member of the Board of Visitors of the United States Naval Academy and the United States Military Academy; editor of Appletons' Cyclopedia of American Biography, "Great Commanders Series," "Memorial History of the City of New York," "The Poets and Poetry of Scotland," and "Memoirs of an American Lady"; author of Sketches of Illinois Officers, "Mr. Secretary Pepys and His Diary," "Life of Fitz-Greene Halleck," "Sketches of Illustrious Soldiers," "Bryant and His Friends," "The World's Largest Libraries," "Love In Letters," "Life of Gen. Grant," "The Presidents of the United States," "Thackeray in the United States."

He has also written many addresses on Lincoln, Grant, Bishop Provoost, Col. John Bayard, Commodore Hull, and Admiral Farragut. And so on.

WANTS NO TOY SOLDIERS.

Dr. Levy Would Stop Centreing the Young Idea on War.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 20.—The Rev. Dr. J. Lennard Levy, pastor of the Rodeph Shalom Congregation and President of the Pittsburg Peace Society, will leave for Europe next month to visit the toy centres of Germany in an effort to prevail upon the manufacturers to cease making toy soldiers, swords, and guns. He believes these toys stimulate in the youthful mind thoughts of war. He will attend The Hague Peace Conference.

"With regard to peace possibilities, I feel very hopeful," said Dr. Levy to-day. "Many have been induced to regard the movement with greator fervor, owing to the example and influence of Andrew Carnegie. Men who gave the matter no attention whatsoever, or who feared ridicule, have recently told me that they regard Mr. Carnegie's crusade in behalf of world peace as the climax of his life's work."

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Last week brought unmistakable signs of a resumption of the trading, both speculative and investment, in high grade properties, which was such a distinctive market feature up to two or three weeks ago when, for some reason, it suffered temporary interruption.

Times Square again provided the largest of the week's transactions in the sale of the Ross estate properties at the southwest corner of Broadway and Forty-sixth Street for about $1,000,000. The new owners have not yet announced what form of improvement, if any, they have in mind for this large plot. Whether or not a new structure of some kind is built there in the near future, it may be assumed that the property will be handled to the best advantage, and that the passage of it into active hands will prove of distinct benefit to the entire neighborhood.

With the purchases of 441 and 595 Broadway by operators within a single week, the old down town mercantile district showed unwonted activity. Despite the migration of many manufacturers and wholesalers to the new uptown mercantile section between Fourteenth and Thirty-fourth Streets, there is still no lack of tenants in the older region, and that this latter, at the present range of prices, should afford some attractive opportunities to buy is not surprising.

The rehabilitation of Lafayette Street, particularly south of Canal Street, has also been brought forcibly to mind by the deals for the northwest corner of Lafayette and Walker Streets, and the entire block front on the east side of Lafayette Street, between Canal and Walker. On part of this block front a new eight-story building is to be erected, which has already been leased for a term of twenty-one years. Changes which have taken place within the last few months have been sufficient to make it certain that Lafayette Street is to become a centre of no small importance for certain branches of the metal and hardware trades, and it seems likely that a considerable amount of new building will be needed to accommodate adequately these newcomers.

That was an interesting announcement made yesterday involving the sale of 37 West Fifty-first Street, and for once, it seems, an effort to introduce business prematurely into a residential block has resped a proper reward. Two years ago this house, in the middle of a block of five dwellings, was made the subject of an unsightly "alteration." The necessary business tenants, however, were not to be obtained, and now the property has been sold to a builder, who will change it back again into a five-story American basement residence. This is probably the first instance on record of a business structure in this city being made over into a dwelling, but it will not be for that reason any less a cause for satisfaction among the other owners on the Fifty-first Street block, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues.

To Build on West 20th Street.

The buyers of the property 6 and 8 West Twentieth Street, the sale of which was recently reported, are Edward Friedman and Isidor Mishkind, who will improve the plot with a twelve-story mercantile building, which will be ready for occupancy Feb. 1, 1908. Plans are now being drawn by Architects Schwartz & Gross. The operation, which will be handled by a recently formed corporation known as the Six and Eight West Twentieth Street Company, will involve an outlay of about $450,000.

Business Ot of 51st Street.

The attempt to make a business thoroughfare out of West Fifty-first Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, has ended unsuccessfully. The property at No. 37 has been sold, through Barton Chapin, to a builder, who will convert it into an American-basemont dwelling. Two years ago this house was altered into a business structure, with a store front extending out to the building line. Business apparently has not yet reached the side streets so far north as this, for it has been impossible to find a tenant, and the present proposed alteration will cause the block to retain its residential character.

The same brokers previously leased for twenty-one years for Mr. Zinsser to the same tenants the building 220 and 222 William Street. With the completion of 224 William Street, the Raynor & Perkins Envelope Company will have for its occupancy a six-story building covering a plot 83 by 114 and containing about 50,000 square feet of space.

THIS WEEK'S BIG AUCTION.

Ogden Estate Offering Will Take Up Two Whole Days—Other Lot Sales.

At 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning Auctioneer Joseph P. Day will begin what is said to be the largest offering of vacant property in the city's history that of the Ogden estate holdings in the Bronx, consisting of 1,100 separate parcels, with a total area of 1,500 city lots.

This question which always goes the rounds when any such enormous sale as this is announced—"Do the owners really want to sell?"—may be answered affirmatively in this instance, if reliance may be placed on the statements of those interested in the offering. The sale is the result of a Supreme Court partition suit, which is said to be the direct result of a desire on the part of the Ogden heirs to divide their interests and convert the property into cash.

The Ogden properties form an immense tract of irregular boundaries, extending from the Harlem River east as far as Shakespeare Avenue, and from 167th Street north to a point several hundred feet north of Washington Bridge.

The greater part of this land lies high, with commanding views to the north, west, and south, and doubtless would have been invaded by builders long ago had it not been for the determination of the Ogden family to keep its holdings intact.

The inaccessibility of the neighborhood heretofore has also had much to do with its retarded development, but this difficulty has been obviated by the operation of trolley cars across the Washington Bridge, placing this entire section in close touch with the Subway at 181st Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. The improved service on the New York Central and Putnam Railroads, with their stations at High Bridge, will also provide improved transit for this region, while just to the east lies the route of the proposed subway on Jerome Avenue.

Besides the lots on high ground, the Ogden estate also controls several hundred feet of Harlem River water front and much land on either side of the railroad tracks, which will be available for manufacturing and shipping.

By starting the sale at 9 A. M. Mr. Day has shown a disposition to take time by the forelock. He has allowed himself Wednesday and Thursday to dispose of the entire offering, so that for two whole days there will be no more difficulty in buying a lot or two than in buying a sandwich and a glass of beer.

For the first time in several months Washington Heights property will be tried at auction this week. To-morrow Bryan L. Kennelly will put up fifteen lots, including the entire block bounded by Broadway and St. Nicholas Avenue, 171st and 172d Streets.

On the following day Auctioneer John L. Parish will offer about twenty-five lots on the Heights. Among these properties are the block front on the west side of Broadway, between 171st and 172d Streets, the northwest corner of St. Nicholas Avenue and 186th Street, the block front on the east side of Wadsworth Avenue, between 174th and 175th Streets, and smaller parcels on 170th Street, Haven Avenue, and 134th Street.

Auctioneer Kennelly is also in the field with two Bronx sales, one of which, listed for to-morrow, covers the entire block bounded by Washington and Baesford Avenues, 182d Street and Fletcher Street. The other is that of 150 lots on the Benson estate tract and in Tremont Terrace, on the Middletown Road, old Pelham Road, and Westchester Avenue extension.

FLATS FOR LONG ISLAND CITY.

Company Will Build Four and Three Story Houses on Tract of 440 Lots.

The Pomeroy estate property, comprising 440 lots in the Steinway Avenue section of Long Island City, has been bought by the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company. The property is valued at about $750,000, and has frontages of 2,750 feet on Broadway, Jamaica Avenue, and Grand Avenue, and 8,825 feet on Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Avenues. The company announces that it will not pursue its usual policy with regard to this property, but instead of selling it off in lots will gradually improve the whole tract with four and five story flats similar to those being built in the Bronx and in the Yorkville section of Manhattan, directly opposite Long Island City.

The tract lies within ten minutes' ride of the eastern end of the Blackwell's Island Bridge and the Belmont tunnel. The Broadway trolley line runs through it, while the Steinway trolley is only a block away. All its streets are supplied with sewers, gas, and water, and three of them are paved with asphalt. Lots in the section are held at from $1,500 to $2,500, or about one-tenth the price paid for Manhattan and Bronx lots lots no nearer the heart of the city in point of time or distance.

Another large deal in the upper end of Long Island City has just been consummated through John Anderson Leach, as attorney. The Kouwenhoven farm, the property of Francis D. and Luke Kouwenhoven, has been purchased by the Steinway Park Realty Company, of which Stuard Hirschman is the President. The tract is five blocks wide and fully half a mils long, and lies west of Steinway Avenue, extending from Flushing Avenue north to the head of the canal at Riker Avenue. The consideration was $750,000. A purchase money mortgage was given for $375,000. It is the intention of the company to put the property on the market immediately.

That Long Island City real estate should have been so hackward as compared with the other boroughs in the past is considered by real estate investors to have been simply a matter of geography and of a peculiar geographical situation. Blackwell's Island stretches up and down the East River for two and a half miles, rendering any ferry service within these limits wholly impracticable. The new bridges and tunnels will eliminate Blackwell's Island as a barrier to Long Island City's progress, and from now on it is thought certain that it will grow, as its situation demands, at least until its realty values become more nearly equal to those of Harlem and the Bronx.

THE TORRENS SYSTEMS.

Uncertainty Regarding Security of Title Under This Plan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to your recent article in which you quote from data compiled by "An officer of one of the title companies" in re the Torrens System of land registration in this State, I most heartily agree with your remark concerning the advisability of hearing the "other side." In other words, I am one of those who desire information on a matter of too great importance to be entered into lightly or unadvisedly. To the query, Do I desire a method adopted by which title to real estate can be registered for a trifling cost, and in a shorter time than at present? I answer, "Yes." But to the further query, Does this proposed method give me the same security as the policy obtainable from the title company? I am forced to reply, "I do not know." And in this uncertainty I do not stand alone. It is for this reason I deplore the action of some of the representatives of the realty interests in New York in approving the Prentice bill now before the Legislature in Albany, on the ground that we are without sufficient information on the subject either to support or oppose the change suggested by the bill.

Conditions here are so dissimilar to those found in New Zealand, and results obtained, after an actual trial of the Torrens method in Illinois, Ohio, Oregon, Minnesota, and Canada, are of so uncertain a nature—even approaching failure—that I deprecate taking any stand in advocacy of the new method until the pros and cons have been thoroughly and conscientiously thrashed out, and this can be done only by listening to those competent to instruct. I would suggest the propriety of the Real Estate Board of Brokers inviting representatives of the title companies to explain to those interested in real estate, as owners or otherwise, the objections to the Torrens system and point out its defects. If these defects are only imaginary and merely put forward to obstruct by reason of fear of loss of business, it will become apparent and react on the heads of the objectors. I think the managers of our title companies are too far seeing to oppose a good system, merely because it reduces the cost of insurance. These conmpanies to my certain knowledge have always shown a disposition to accept and advance that which was proved best for the real estate interests of New York City, and I think are ready and able from practical experience to adopt the best system of registration of titles.

Anything of value offered free has a certain attraction for some people; with me it creates suspicion that all is not right. If I want a title examined, why is not the work of a professional examiner, guaranteed by a company with capital sufficient to defend, worth a fee? We owe much to the title companies. They do more than examine and insure titles; they throw open their doors to all real estate brokers of good standing, prepare contracts, and give advice on realty matter that is of the greatest value to brokers, buyers, and sellers, thereby facilitating the transfers of real property.

BUILDING FREAK HYDROPLANE

There is building at Boston a hydroplane of unique type that is expected to attain a thirty-mile speed. The boat is only 14 feet long, and weighs only 145 pounds, so that it could be readily lifted from the water and carried by its owner. It has four feet beam, and is to be equipped with a thirty-five-horse-power engine, while the total depth of the hull is less that a foot.

The model on which the boat is constructed is of French origin, and has been successfully demonstrated abroad. Its especial characteristic is a projecting tooth fixed in the bottom which forces the boat out of the water as it incerases its speed, so that instead of meeting the resistance of a wetted surface, it skims over the water, while the propeller, affixed in the stern at an angle, remains submerged. The engine is installed forward of the tooth, and the shaft isso arranged as to bring the propeller about midway between the centre of the tooth and the stern, where the operator sits. The builder of the peculiar craft is confident that he can attain a thirty-mile speed or better with it.

A SCHOOL "LADY BOUNTIFUL."

Brings Joy to the Youngsters' Hearts by Equipping Them for Sports.

At Public School No. 77 the little youngsters, who have taken up athletics and are wild for the chance to enter in the games, are worshipping at the shrine of Miss Musette Dexter, who is their Lady Bountiful. Miss Dexter is one of the teachers, and one morning at roll call she observed that one of her pupils, usually a bright-eyed, ambitious boy, seemed to be worrying over something. She questioned him, and he told her that he felt badly because he would be unable to participate in any of the athletic events.

"How is that?" she querled.

The youngster said that he was too poor to purchase a pair of trunks and that other boys were in the same predicament.

"Never mind, my dear," she said soothingly, and two days later she presented him with a pair of trunks which she had designed and made herself. Other lads were similarly equipped. Miss Dexter declares that she found more pleasure in doing this little act of kindness than in anything in her life, and says that none of the boys who cannot afford the luxury of trunks need worry as long as she has the necessary money to buy the muslin and the deftness to make them.

NEW QUARTER-MILE CHAMPION

Cartmell Running 440 Yards Faster Than Taylor Will Go After Title.

Trainer Mike Murphy has solved the question of placing Pennsylvania's wealth of track material by reserving N. Z. Cartmell, who has twice won the intercollegiate sprinte in the quarter mile, where he has been repeatedly defeating Taylor in the training for the distance. Cartmell has the speed, the strength, and the sprint to outrun the colored man, who, on account of his slow starting, is handicapped severely. Cartmell will be Penn's main dependence in the quarter mile, Taylor simply running for a place, with instructions to save his strength to beat Parsons in the half.

Cartmell will also run the 220 yards, leaving the 100 to Whitham, whom Murphy believes can win the event. In fact, Murphy counts on these four men to win the four shorter track races and to land him at least three second places as well. If they realize his expectation they alone will score enough points to pretty nearly land the championship for Pennsylvania.

New Jersey Golfers Open Season.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 20.—New Jersey golfers were out in force yesterday when several of the golf clubs in the vicinity of Newark opened the season. Fifty members were out on the links of the Forest Hill Field Club, and a friendly competitive match was a ball sweepstakes, the play which resulted in a tie between Harry Lyons and Henry Allsopp, with a net score of 74. In the play-off Lyons came in with 85, Vance to be dradicap of 25, Allsopp 13, and Lyons 20. Forty of golfers were out the to the Glen Ridge Club, where F. W. Baldwin won the golfers' sweepstakes with a net score of 74.

AFTER RELAY CHAMPIONSHIP.

Colleges and Schools That Will Run for Titles at Big Carnival.

With an entry of 180 different institutions, the annual relay carnival of the University of Pennsylvania, to be held on Franklin Field, in Philadelphia, on Saturday, has closed its lists with the promise of exceptionally interesting contests. There are six championship events scheduled in addition to the special invitation contests on the track and field in which the best college athletes in the East and West are to contest. The entries for the three college championships are Pennsylvania, Cornell, and the University of Chicago in the mile; Dartmouth, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Yale, and Columbia in the two-mile, and Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Cornell in the four-mile. In addition there will be a mile freshman relay for the first time since the games were started, in which Pennsylvania, Yale, and Princeton will enter teams.

Forty-two colleges will send teams for the various class relay races for college teams. New York is repreeented by the College of the City of New York, Fordham, Pratt Institute, New York Law School, Brooklyn Law School, and Brooklyn Polytechnic.

Thirty-four high schools will compete in the various high school events, including Brooklyn Manual Training School, Newark High School, and Montclair High School. Lawrenceville and St. Paul's Schools are among the forty-six schools entered for the preparatory school championship.

Standard Rating for Horse Power.

A serious effort is being made by the mechanical branch of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers to establish standard rating for horse power. The horse powor of a cer under the present ratings may inean anything a salesman may say, as various formulae for computing these ratings are used, no twe giving the seme results. The standards es suggested are to be taken from a brake test at the flywheel, in conjunction with a formula to be suggested by the Test Committee. Two units are to be used, the lower being the actual rating from the brake teste, as computed from an indicator at 1,000 feet per minute pieton speed, and the higher number to be the maximum horse power developed from superior workmanship or the result of a better type motor. For example, in a 20-24 horse power motor the 20 would be the actual horse power at 1,000 feet per minute piston speed and the 24 the horss power which would be developed when not under normal conditions.

Atlantic City.

Marlborough-Blenheim
Atlantic City, N. J.
April
The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest end most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "nice people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to completely enjoy all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.
The hotel claims distinction for its location, its ample public epace devoted to its guests, its high-class music every night throughout the yeer, but particularly attractive with eolo singers at the week-ends during the Spring season and its ownership management.
All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with separate kitchens and French cooks) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Grill Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. Thess are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms 34 by 20 feet and a private bath (supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every alternate room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is reputed to be the most completely fireproof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

PRIEST, SLUMMING, ROBBED BY WOMEN

Makes Complaint to Police Under False Name and Then Disappears.

COURT WANTS TO SEE HIM

Detective Fails to Bring Him and Is Ordered to Find Him by To-morrow Morning.

The recent experiences, while on a slumming tour, of the Rev. W. Howard Mears, who pursued his sociological researches to a point where he had to be rescued by the police from the hands of the subjects he was studying, were vividly recalled to Magistrate House and others in the Tombs Court yesterday, when Lieut. Miller of the Detective Bureau arraigned two women on a charge of highway robbery. The real complainant failed to appear in court, but, according to Miller, he is a clergyman and probably a priest. As complainant he gave the name "John Murphy," and this Miller declared to be fictitious.

The evident efforts of several clergymen to suppress all newspaper mention of the case strengthened the belief that this man is not only a clergyman, but a prominent divine. The clergymen took pains to assure reporters and court attendants that there was nothing in the story, declaring that it was not worh printing.

The Rev. Luke Evers, a chaplain of the Tombs and a Roman Catholic priest, sent for Miller as soon as he reached the courtroom. The two men conversed for some time, and when he returned before the rail Miller seemed to have forgotten all that he had known of "Murphy's" identity.

The fact that Murphy had not appeared in court, coupled with the evident unwillingness of the detective to reveal his true identity, aroused Magistrate House. He sent Miller off to the Hotel Bartholdi, the address given hy Murphy, to bring the complainant to the court. On his return the detective reported that no John Murphy was at the hotel.

"I will give you until 10 o'clock on Monday morning to produce this complainant," said Magistrate House then. "This is a case of the greatest importance, and I am going to make every effort to have it pressed to trial."

The Magistrate then remanded the prisoners to the Tombs Prison until Monday morning. They gave the names of Catherine Wells of 257 West Thirty-sixth Street and Laura Brown of 210 West Thirty-fourth Street. Each was held in $3,000 bail, despite the efforts of their lawyer to have them discharged on the ground of lack of evidence.

According to the story told by Miller when he first reached court, a man wearing clerical dress and giving the name of John Murphy called at the Central Office on Friday. There he complained that on Thursday night he had been going along Thirty-first Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue, when he had been held up by two women. One had grabbed him about his neck, jerking his head back so that he could not cry out or protect himself, while the other went rapidly through his pockets and robbed him of $17.

Miller accompanied the apparent clergyman, and at the Bartholdi Hotel, Miller said, he pointed out two women as those who had robbed him. Miller arrested the women and took them to Headquarters. Before he was stricken with his sudden loss of memory, Miller said that despite the clergyman's story of the robbery, it appeared that he had been slumming and had fallen into the company of the two women. With them he had visited a hotel and there the women had robbed him. The clergyman had refused to accompany Miller to Headquarters and had wished to avoid all publicity, although Miller said that he had agreed to appear in court.

Although Miller reported himself unable to locate "John Murphy," such a man had been stopping at the Bartholdi Hotel since Thursday. He left the hotel early yesterday morning. He registered on Thursday night, signing his name, "John Murphy, Chicago," and was assigned to Room 200. According to the clerk at the hotel, Murphy was in his room both on Thursday and Friday nights.

SON'S FIGHT FOR BIG ESTATE.

R. L. Barry, Who Was Cut Off in Will, Says He's Only Legitimate Child.

A suit which has been filed in the Supreme Court shows a fight for the $250,000 estate of John H. Barry, who died at his home, 116 West Seventy-third Street, on May 25, 1904. The fight is primarily between two young men, each of whom asserts that he is the legitimate son and rightful heir.

Mr. Barry's will, which was admitted to probate on June 4, 1904, did not mention Robert L. Barry, the plaintiff in the suit. It recited that Grace H. Barry was the testator's wife, and that she and her son, Alfred E. Barry, were to be the executors, trustees and sole beneficiaries of the will. The appraisal of Mr. Barry's property estimated the realty to be worth over $20,000, consisting of the Seventy-third Street house and several lots in Rochester; and that the personalty aggregated over $220,000.

Robert L. Barry, in his complaint, declares, through his guardian, he being yet a minor, that Alfred Barry is an illegitimate child, and that the alleged widow is really named Grace H. Hestis, who was never married to the plaintiff's father.

The plaintiff says that the real wife of the dead man was a Miss Catherine Roche of Rochester, N. Y., whose son he is. She died in 1899, he continues, after which he was sent to a boarding school. He says he was recognized by Mr. Barry as his son up to 1903, when the young man angered the father by marrying without his consent.

Then, the complaint goes on, Grace H. Hestis got control over the old man, who was mentally incapacitated at the time, and induced him to make the will which gave to her and her son all his estate. Robert L. Barry maintains that the will is thus invalidated, and that his father died intestate, leaving him the rightful heir.

Justice MacLean had previously ordered that the plaintiff produce a bill of particulars setting out the date of his mother's marriage to Mr. Barry and the date of his birth. Justice O'Gorman yesterday ordered that the defendants produce the same data concerning themselves.

ALTO YOLO SHAKEN.

Singer Has an Elevator Boy Arrested —He Says He Didn't Do It.

Alta Yolo, the singer, was in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday to charge Frederick Anthony, a negro elevator boy at 17 West Twenty-sixth Street, with having assaulted her the day before.

"I went to No. 17," she said, "and when I asked for the janitor this boy abused me and shook me by the shoulder."

The singer, with her husband, G. D. High, has a studio at 1,147 Broadway. The same janitor is in charge of the Broadway and Twenty-sixth Street building. On Friday she went to the apartment house on Twenty-sixth Street to ask the janitor to turn more heat into her studio. Then the incident occurred. At her request Policeman Landers of the West Thirtieth Street Station arrested the boy.

Anthony showed a rip in the sleeve of his coat, and said that Miss Yolo had torn it.

"Mrs. High come," he said, "and raise a big predicament wid me. All I done was shut de door behind her."

Anthony was held in $300 bail for examination to-day.

WOMAN SAVES SIX LIVES.

Breaks Into a Gas-Filled Flat—1 Dead in 70th St., 2 May Die.

Mrs. Sarah Siroca and her five daughters, who live on the fifth floor of a six-story tenement at 871 East Tenth Street, were overcome by gas in their home yesterday morning, but were revived by an ambulance surgeon and will recover, thanks to the efforts of an energetic neighbor, who knew how to act in an emergency.

The neighbor was Mrs. Tillie Spanglet, who livee just across the hall from the Sirocas. At 7 o'clock Mrs. Spanglet was awakened and almost overcome by strong gas fumes. She sprang out of bed and opened a window, and when she could find no gas escaping in her rooms, went to the hall and discovered that the trouble was in the Siroca flat.

She could not awaken any one, and therefore hurst open the door and opened the windows. On the kitchen floor were Jessie Siroca, aged 8, and Betsy, aged 20, who had evidently been aroused and sought to get to a window, but had fallen to the floor unconscious. In adjoining rooms were Lena, 12; Dora, 16; Rosie, 19, and the mother, who is 50 years old, all of them in bed and unconscious.

Mrs. Spanglet ran to a telephone and called Police Headquarters, and as she was rushing back to the house she met Patrolman Coleman of the Union Market Station, whom she helped to drag the victims into her own rooms.

The family cat was probably responsible for the accident. A gas cock on a small stove had been turned on by a broom falling against it.

The two babies of Frank and Antonia Fousek, cigarmakers, with their nurse, Jennie Schadak, an elderly woman, were overcome by gas in their rooms on the first floor of the tenement at 414 East Seventieth Street yesterday. The youngest child, Albert, 2 years old, was dead when found. By his side lay his brother Frank, 4 years old, while kneeling at the side of the bed was the body of the nurse.

Gas was pouring out of a burner of the gas stove in an adjoining room. It had probably been accidentally opened. At the Presbyterian Hospital it was said that the elder child and Mrs. Schadak had only a slight chance of recovery.

CIRCUS OFF; WILD WEST HERE

After the circus had finished its performance last night ringside employés hauled away until no vestige of circus apparatus was left on the ground or in the air, for it's to the canvas and the open road for the circus.

At the same time the advance army of Buffalo Bill's Wild West began preparations for that organization, which will occupy the Garden for an engagement of three weeks, commencing next Tuesday afternoon.

The Wild West comes after an absence of five years abroad, where, says Major Burke, "the crowned and other heads of Europe were instructed in the manners and customs of a land which they may never visit." Not only are the most important of those scenes of Western life, that made the small boy and his lasso of a generation ago a nuisance to his neighbors, retained but new features have been added. The new Indian battle scene this year is based upon an event in Gen. E. A. Carr's campaign of 1869, when the "Dog Soldier" band of Indians from various tribes was beaten to pieces in an engagement where Buffalo Bill was Chief of Scouts for Gen. Carr. "Iron Tail" and seven of the older Indians with the Wild West were in this engagement.

Since Buffalo Bill was on the trail the Western train hold up has come into existence. This year's performance will show "bandit hunters of the West" punishing such marauders. Another innovation will be the appearance of a number of trained bronchos in riding of the Hauté Ecole style, which has up to the present been confined to the horseflesh of older communities.

$1,500 IN LOOT IN FLAT.

Louisa Marcarious, a young white woman, was held with two negroes in Jefferson Market Court yesterday on the charge of receiving stolen goods. Mrs. Margaret Melbourne of 110 East Eighty-seventh Street was the complainant. She said her home had been robbed of silverware and other property on June 4, 1906, and that she had identified some silverware which was found in the rooms of the Marcarious woman and her companions at 30 West 130th Street.

Detectives Boyle, Dale, and John J. Fogarty raided the Marcarious flat at 4 o'clock A. M. on Friday and found property worth $1,500. The possession of all this loot could not be explained by the three prisoners. The two negroes gave their names as Floyd Miselle, a bartender, and Harry Smott, a waiter.

Louisa Marcarious said she was born in New Orleans. She is 24 years old, was well dressed, and is apparently an educated woman. The two negroes seemed uncouth companions for the refined-looking white woman. A well-known politician, whose name the detectives declined to mention, has been asked to inspect the loot recovered and see if he can identify anything as part of the plunder stolen from his house.

At the request of the detectives the prisoners were remanded in $1,000 bail or examination to-morrow. Each pleaded not guilty.

SINGLE TAXERS HIT ALL THE RICH MEN

JAB FOR ROOSEVELT, TOO

Reminded of Time When He Was a Free Trader—Bryan Letter on Special Privilege.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jacob H. Schiff, Andrew Carnegie, and William R. Hearst each came in for comments at the hands of speakers at the Jefferson birthday dinner of the Manhattan Single Tax Club in the Union Square Hotel last night. Roosevelt's Americanism was declared vastly inferior to that of an Indian, Chief Joseph, whose utterances ex-Congressman Robert Baker had recently read.

Jacob H. Schiff was characterised as being vastly ignorant in the recent speech in which he professed his admiration for Rockefeller. As for Carnegie and Hearst they were made the subject of a play written by William C. De Mille, the playwright, at the table while the others were speaking, and which told of a conversation the two had had with the shade of Thomas Jefferson recently.

There was also a letter from Bryan which said that the times needed the application of Jefferson's ideas. In this connection Frederic Cyrus Leubuscher announced that he had invited Roosevelt to be present, and had taken occasion to remind him of the time when he and Mr. Roosevelt were fellow-members of the Executive Committee of the Free Trade Club. The usual Loeb letter of regret had come, however.

Ex-Congressman Baker began by reading from the speech of Jacob H. Schiff in which he had said that men like Rockefeller gathered the little streams that otherwise would be wasted and brought their waters into vast reservoirs.

"This is the utterance of probably the richest Jew in the United States," he said. "How unfortunate it is that we have men like the Rockefellers, the Schiffs, the Rogerses, the Goulds to gather in these little streamlets that otherwise would be wasted.

"How fortunate to have the Standard Oil, which paid $397,000,000 in dividends. How fortunate that we see the other side of the picture, the east side woman stitching her life away, the effects of the impounding of the streams, that we see 80,000,000 people the slaves of eight men.

"The utterance of Chief Joseph, 'Treat all men alike,' is good Democratic doctrine. It is better than anything that I have seen eminate from the phonograph at Washington.

"We have recently had a peace conference in this city. It has been used for the exploitation of a great possessor of special privilege. This gentleman has run the machine just as he would have run a steel mill. No man was allowed to have anything to say unless Carnegie had passed him. This man stands to-day before the public as the head of the peace movement—this man who has exerted a corrupting influence through the protective tariff for a quarter of a century.

"Those who would rule us in this country talk of whether the people can be trusted or not, when it is a question of whom the people are willing to trust. The people have the right to make their own mistakes."

In Mr. De Mille's play Thomas Jefferson was endeavoring to point out to Hearst and Carnegie some of the time's faults.

"Learning lies in books," says Carnegie in the play, "And when a man is safe in a library reading my books he won't get his head filled with nonsense from newspaper editorials."

"Have you ever heard of the single tax?" Jefferson asks.

"It's a mere detail," answers Hearst. "The thing to do is to get good men into office."

"Why say men?" interrupts Carnegie. "I have heard of single tax. In every one of my endowed seats of learning I have a professor who is paid to do nothing else except to show that it is nonsense. There are many people who think that Henry George makes cigars. But the cigars are punk. That's where we are devilish shrewd."

William Jennings Bryan's letter contained this reference to Jefferson as a present-day need:

"Jefferson is an exemplar of the civic virtues which at this time need most to be presented to the country. An educated man, he endeavored to give to all an opportunity to attend school; a rich man, his sympathies were with the poor, and he asked for himself no rights that they did not share; the apostle of democracy, he possessed as none had before him the virtue of a government resting upon the consent of the governed, and none since his death has surpassed him in his confidence in the capacity of the people for self-government. We need to-day in the State and in the Nation an application of his ideas to government, for in the doctrine, 'Equal rights to all and special privileges to none,' we shall find the solution of most of the problems which vex us."

POLICE STOP A HONEYMOON.

New York Couple, Wed Three Days, Arrested in Boston for Theft.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 20.—A honeymoon was abruptly brought to a close this evening when Police Inspectors arrested Jeanette Welensky-Bishop, 19 years old, a strikingly pretty brunette, and her newly wedded huehand, Harry Bishop, 32 years old, for the New York police on the charge of grand larceny.

Crestfallen and weeping, the bride pitifully implored Inspectors Gaddis and McCausland not to place her and her husband of only a few days in a cell, as a grave mistake had been made, and that some revengeful person from New York wanted to interfere with their marital bliss.

The bride said that she and her husband came to this city a short time ago and were married just three days ago. The couple were strolling along Tremont Street yesterday afternoon when the observing Inspectors arrested them.

Lieut. Walsh, on the desk at the Detective Bureau at Police Headquarters, last night received a telegram from Chief of Police Watts of Boston to the effect that Harry Bishop and Jeanette Welensky, of New York City, had been arrested there. Lieut. Walsh said the young man was charged with abduction, and the young woman with the larceny of $55 and a muff.

The couple left here April 17 and had since been married, Walsh said. He said he learned from Chief Watts that the couple had agreed to waive extradition proceedings and come back to New York at once. As to the address of the prisoners here or the names of the parents of the young woman, who are supposed to be complainants, Walsh would say nothing.

WOOD'LL MAKE 'EM SWIM.

All Soldiers Should Know the Art, New Commander Here Thinks.

"When Gen. Wood gets here," said a Sergeant of the Twelfth Infantry yesterday, who has twenty years' faithful service behind him, "I reckon there won't be any more boats between here and New York."

The recruit sitting on a cannon at Governors Island alongside the grizzled veteran of Indian and Philippine campaigns asked him what he meant.

"Just this," answered the Sergeant. "Gen. Wood is one of those men who believes in swimming, and if I'm not wrong he'll put the ferryboat Gen. Hancock out of commission and make you take the overhand route every time you go to New York."

Then the Sergeant, who was under Gen. Wood in Mindanao, explained that the officer who is soon to take command of the troops in the East believes that a soldier is far from proficient if he cannot swim almost any distance, despite all kinds of handicaps.

"The soldier that can't swim," said the Sergeant, "won't get the glad hand from the man who is coming here from the Philippines to take command, and I know what I'm talking about. When we were in Mindanao Gen. Wood issued an order that a 100-yard journey through the bay was to be one of our regular military exercises. We had to swim 25 yards in heavy marching order, 50 yards in light marching order, and another 75 yards in our uniform. This was an almost daily occurrence, and maybe the troops in Mindanao didn't learn all the tricks about swimming. One of our officers, one of the fellows told me, wrote Gen. Wood and suggested calling us ducks instead of soldiers. And that's what we would have been, too, only we wasn't web-footed."

MAY ACCUSE "BOB" NELSON.

Charles Gondorf, or Charles Earle, as he is sometimes known, who was arrested on the charge that he had hunkoed William F. Walker, the fugitive Treasurer of the New Britain Savings Bank of New Britain, Conn., out of $100,000, was before Supreme Court Justice Bischoff yesterday on a writ of habeas corpus sued out by his attorney.

The writ was issued on the statement that the District Attorney had advised the committing Magistrate not to accept the $20,000 bail offered by "Bob" Nelson. The prisoner's lawyer told Justice Bischoff that Nelson owned property worth $117,000 and had often furnished bail in the sum of $25,000.

The District Attorney informed Justice Bischoff that Nelson's offer of bail had been refused because he might become a defendant in the case. On the day that Walker disappeared from New Britain Earle and Nelson, it was stated, went to Havana, and occupied the same stateroom.

The motion was adjourned until to-morrow by Justice Bischoff, and the writ was withdrawn, permission being granted for a renewal of the motion if bail is not accepted before that time.

FIREMAN MORTALLY HURT.

Dodges a Burst of Flame, Stumbles, and Falls to the Street.

William Van Horn, a Jersey City fireman, was mortally injured yesterday at a fire in the plant of the Day Manufacturing Company at 305 to 309 Warren Street.

Van Horn went to the roof of the building and a column of flame burst through a skylight. As he jumped back to avoid it he stumbled and fell to the street. At St. Francis's Hospital it was said that he would die.

The fire, which was of unknown origin, spread rapidly and a general alarm was turned in. The interior of the building was burned out, and the flames spread to four tenements adjoining, which were all badly damaged, the tenants being compelled to flee to the street.

The Day Manufacturing Company estimates its loss at $20,000. The tenements, which are owned by Detective Sergeant Grady of New York, were damaged to the extent of $5,000.

THAW JURORS DINE AND ORGANIZE CLUB

"Harry K. Thaw Jury Association" Will Have a Reunion Every Year.

SEEM IN HARMONY NOW

But Steele Again Says Some Things Went on in the Jury Room That Ought to be Known.

Out of the first reunion of eleven of the twelve jurors in the trial of Harry Kendall Thaw for the killing of Stanford White, when they met at the Broadway Central Hotel last night, came the Harry Thaw Jury Association, which is to hold an annual banquet hereafter.

George Pfaff, Juror No. 2, was unavoidably detained out of town. His absence was deplored by the other eleven, who sat down to a dinner in the former jury dining room, and by none more, it seemed, than by Juror Wilbur F. Steele, with whom it was reported Pfaff had words during the attempt to reach a verdict.

If any of the jurymen had ever felt bitterly toward each other, that feeling had apparently disappeared last night. The eleven certainly made up for many wearisome and nerve-straining hours. They had, as one of them expressed it, the time of their lives last night.

The menu cards bore this inscription: "Reunion of the Thaw Jury, Saturday, April 20, 1907." Between courses and amid laughter several of the jurors read anonymous letters and other communications received by them during the trial. Most of them won high place as crank efforts.

All admitted that Charles H. Fecke, Juror No. 3, got the worst one. It denounced him in bitter terms, paid no high tributes to several of the principals of the great case, and gently described District Attorney Jerome in various ways.

Another juror had an interesting and instructive letter. It urged him to be on the lookout bridge at certain times, and when he should pass an individual peculiarly dressed, he, under pain of annihilation, was quietly to drop the small sum of $5,000 in the hat of the passerby. The juror explained that he hadn't dropped the money.

Then there were letters in considerable numbers from some young girls pleading for certain votes by the jurymen.

Before he went in to dinner, Juror Wilbur F. Steele said:

"I believed Thaw to be insane, as the evidence tended to show. Since the trial, by other things that have come under my notice, my opinion has been more strongly formed than ever. I don't believe the men on that jury would stoop to any sort of crookedness. But there are things which happened in the juryroom which I think the world ought to know, and which I think it will know some day."

Juror Henry C. Harney said he felt it was his duty to come to the dinner after what had been said. He said he could not understand how some men of the jury took the stand they did. He had made up his mind from the testimony alone, was not afraid to give his reasons for it, and was prepared to stay locked up for two weeks if necessary to reach a decision.

THAW JURORS EXAMINED.

Newton Tells of Policeman's Alleged Attempt to Influence Him.

Charles E. Newton and John S. Dennee, two of the jurors in the trial of Harry K. Thaw, were at the District Attorney's office yesterday in answer to a subpoena. They were asked about the alleged attempt of one of the police squad detailed at the Criminal Court Building to influence their verdict. It had been reported that as they were passing into the jury-room a policeman called their attention to the fact that the father of Thaw was a Mystic Shriner.

Mr. Newton told Assistant District Attorney Smyth that he was a member of that order, and that a policeman, also a member, had called his attention to the fact that Thaw's father had been in the order. The policeman did not force the matter on his attention, and Mr. Newton thought enough of it to tell his colleagues. Mr. Dennee had no first-hand knowledge of the affair, but said that he had heard of it.

All the policemen who were stationed in the Criminal Court Building during the trial will be called down there to-morrow morning and Mr. Newton will be asked to pick out the man who approached him.

All of Thaw's lawyers, Messrs. O'Reilly, Hartridge, and Peabody, called on him yesterday, but declared that there was no special significance in their visits. It had been suggested that there might be some reason for the long talks Dr. Jelliffe has had in the last few days with the prisoner, but Mr. Hartridge denied yesterday that he had any intention beyond helping to while away some of Thaw's abundant leisure.

The Thaw jurors held a reunion last night at the Broadway Central Hotel. They were all present except George Pfaff, who was out of town.

WOULDN'T SELL THAW HOME.

Mrs. Thaw Didn't Approve of Purchasers, Who Offered $400,000.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 20.—The agents of Mrs. William Thaw found a purchaser for the old Thaw mansion, Lyndhurst, for $400,000, but Mrs. Thaw to-day refused to confirm the sale. As badly as she wants ready money she will not let the old home go to any one of whom she does not approve.

With her daughter, the Countess of Yarmouth, Mrs. Thaw will go to her Summer cottage at Cresson, Penn., some time next week. The cottage is on the crest of the Allegany Mountains and Mrs. Thaw believes that at Cresson she can find the rest and solitude which she so much desires.

HARRISBURG, Pa., April 20.—A mortgage to secure the $25,000,000 bond issue of the American Union Telephone Company, which controls most of the independent lines in Pennsylvania and adjacent states, was filed in the Dauphin County Court to-day.

The mortgage was given to the Fidelity Title and Trust Company of Pittsburg, trustee for the issue.

ASKS FOR NEGRO TENANTS.

Flatbush Angry at Policeman's Offer to Let Flats to Colored People.

The residents of Linden Avenue and Lenox Road, one of the best neighborhoods in Flatbush, are indignant over the seeming efforts of a policeman-landlord to fill an apartment house owned by him with negro tenants. The neighbors assert that the policeman is doing it for spite.

The policeman is C. M. Luerssen, a patrolman attached to the Flatbush Station. He lives in Bay View Place, and is the owner of a three-story double apartment house at 259 Linden Avenue. The house is one of a row of new buildings of like character owned by different individuals. While some of the other houses began to fill up, Luerssen, it is alleged, was not so successful as he desired in getting tenants for the six apartments in his house. He is said to have expressed the belief that the owner of a neighboring building was winning tenants away from his house and to have talked about "getting even." None of the neighbors paid any heed to the matter until yesterday morning, when they were startled to find staring them in the face from a window of Luerssen's house the following sign:

Apartments to Let
For Colored People.

The neighbors were indignant, and in a short time a crowd gathered in front of the house, expressing sentiments anent the policeman-landlord's move. A family of white people who had moved into the house were the most indignant of all, and were threatening to move out if the sign were not taken down. Other residents of the neighborhood declared that they would move away if negroes moved into the house. Efforts to have the sign removed failed. One bold neighbor, however, entered the house and reversed the placard. The reversed sign was still in the window last evening.

So far as known, no negroes had tried to rent an apartment in the house.

SCULPTOR TELLS OF GREAT LOSS

G. G. Barnard Says He Is Victim of Pennsylvania Capitol Scandal.

HIS CONTRACT VIOLATED

Declares He Has Only Received $60,000, and Was to be Reimbursed Later.

HAS DESIGNED 100 FIGURES

PARIS, April 20.—George Grey Barnard, who was commissioned to do the sculpture work for the Pennsylvania Capitol Building in Harrisburg, has been reading the accounts of the scandal connected with that edifice with bitter interest.

Mr. Barnard is now living with his wife and daughter at Moret, a quiet Old World village near Fontainebleu. Here in a huge and somewhat dilapidated grange, which Barnard has transformed into a studio, are some of the groups of statuary which the sculptor designed for the Pennsylvania Capitol.

There are in all 100 figures, ranging in size from small modelings to those of more than life size—casts of which when done into marble were to have adorned the entrance to the Capitol.

"Those figures represent," said Barnard, "not only three years of the hardest work possible for a man, but a whole lifetime of artistic thought and development. When the Capitol was being planned the State Architect, Joseph M. Huston, summoned me. He asked me if I would undertake to furnish the sculpture for the building. Before him and the committee I drew up a design which, in the opinion of artists well qualified to judge, would be a fitting and adequate feature in the scheme. They offered me $700,000 for the work. Had they offered me $7,000,000,000 it would have been all the same to me. My head was in the clouds, as it was in the clouds when I was studying at the Beaux Arts in Paris and walked the streets with my trouser legs pinned together to hide the tatters.

"Then when the contract came to be drawn up the price was cut down to $300,000, for which sum it was understood I was to furnish two groups on either side of the entrance; another was a relief to crown the entrance, and various figures to decorate either end of the façade. This work was divided into three parts, which, it was thoroughly well understood, were to be left in my hands. Eventually the contract was very, very different from the original proposition that was drawn up and under which I was to supply within three years three groups and bas-reliefs which were to be placed on either side of the entrance and above it.

"This was the most difficult and most costly part of the work. I explained that $100,000 would not more than defray my actual expense. But Huston proposed that committees would purchase my statue of "The Sower," now on exhibition in Brooklyn, and my well-known oak clock for $40,000, which would enable me to meet my personal expenses during the period before I could undertake the remainder of the other two parts of sculptural decoration. Then it was insisted that I should give a guarantee that the work would be finished within three years.

"That proposal, I think, was unheard of in the whole history of art. However, it was represented that no such guarantee was necessary, and I was told that we were all sons of Pennsylvania, and were all imbued with the one idea to give the best that was in us to our State. Architects, contractors, furnishers, painters, every one, I was informed, was working on the Capitol Building under the one self-sacrificing idea. No one was getting anything out of it. Everybody was putting all he could into it, and giving with good grace.

"I agreed to everything proposed to me. The contract was drawn up under which the Baltimore Bonding Company went my sponsor for $50,000. One hundred thousand dollars was to be paid me in monthly installments. The first $20,000 due me I never received, as it was paid over to the Baltimore Bonding Company, and, with the exception of the first month's allowance, money was never once sent me on time and in accordance with the agreement. My representations by later cable dispatches were disregarded.

"My position was a most difficult one. I had engaged a number of workmen, who had come out here from Paris with their wives and families, and to whom I could not pay regular wages to which they were entitled, nor could I get any satisfaction in regard to the purchase of the statue and clock upon which I had counted. The necessary outlay in renting studios, the purchase of materials, and the payment of workmen took up all the money I received from the State Treasury, which, by the way, did not amount to $87,000, as it is reported that the Capitol Investigation Committee has ascertained, but at most $60,000 or $61,000.

"What was I getting personally out of this? What return for my lifetime of study and years and years of labor? From the time I came to France and began work on my groups for the Capitol. I slaved to carry out my agreement. My friends said it was impossible to accomplish in three years what I had planned to do. The artists and sculptors who came out from Paris to look at my groups said they were grandiose and represented the labor of a lifetime. But my heart was set on doing what I had undertaken to do. My groups represented a whole panorama of life as I saw it, the joy and tribulation of life and the crowning triumph of labor. It meant to me a realization of the dreams that had been mine in my youth and had assumed a definite, tangible form with maturity. I wanted to give the best that was in me, and I spared myself no effort."

Mr. Barnard then went on to speak of the innumerable difficulties he had encountered. Huston, he said, knew he could not give them all the work called for in the contract for the money. Two bas-reliefs alone represented $25,000 apiece. The State Treasury owed him between $37,000 and $38,000 of money due him under the contract, which it was thoroughly understood by the architect members of the committee and everybody concerned was only a partial contract, and called for two other contracts under which the sculptor would be able to reimburse himself.

AMERICAN FEATURES TO LEAD

LONDON, April 20.—The English Directors of the International Horse Show are counting on America to furnish most of the sensational features of the exhibition. The manager, Mr. Euren, says a large number of American entries are being made. A good many high jumpers are coming, including Hugh Willet's Heatherbloom and George Pepper's Toronto horses.

Mr. Euren thinks Mr. Armour's famous string of grays will attract enormous attention. They will be exhibited to the London public on May 20 in the annual cart horse parade in Regent's Park. This parade arouses the keenest rivalry of England's big commercial houses, and the pick of this country's draught and delivery horses is always seen in it. It is expected, however, that this year England's best will look very ordinary in comparison with Armour's turnout.

J. Ogden Armour may drive the grays at the Olympia exhibition. He is in London now, but is not absolutely certain to stay through the Horse Show.

Applications for seats and boxes are coming in fast. Boxes are $50 to $350 for the whole show. Seats are up to $2 a night.

It is understood here that Alfred G. Vanderbilt will take a majority of the twenty shares of stock of $5,000 each which the show company will issue soon.

There seems to be no doubt that the King and Queen will attend the show, possibly every night.

A prominent contestant for the highest honors at the horse show will be Walter Winans, an American who has lived in England most of his life. He is preparing a large number of horses for the exhibition. A party of Londoners went at his invitation yesterday to his place, Pluckley, Kent, and witnessed some very interesting performances by his horses on his private track, polo ground, and jumping school. His horses are valued at close to £100,000.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Berlin papers, even those free of Lutheran proclivities, are indignant with the Kaiser for having bestowed the highest German decoration, the Order of the Black Eagle, on the Prince of Monaco, who, while unequaled as a scientist in deep-sea investigations, is also responsible for the gambling Casino at Monte Carlo.

Die Zukunft thus laments: "In all the world there is not a word which has a worse sound than 'Monaco,' and yet we bestow on him a decoration bearing the legend, 'Suum Cuique,' ('To each one his own.') First it was the Russian Stoessel, still under the accusation of cowardice; now it is Albert Honorius, the opera prince and gambling ruler."

WIRELESS SYSTEM BEST

We Can Also Give Foreigners Points on Cable Construction, Surpassing Even Scotland's Shipyards.

LONDON, April 20.—Admiral Henry N. Manney, who has been since last September on a tour of inspection for the United States of the naval armaments and equipment of European nations, gave me to-day an interesting interview on the result of his observations. After visiting Germany, France, Denmark, Italy, England, and Scotland and thoroughly familiarizing himself with the latest improvements relating to naval efficiency, the Admiral is of the opinion that the United States is still ahead in all essentials.

"Much has been printed in the newspapers," said he, "of England's Dreadnoughts; but I have learned through careful investigation that though each of England's Dreadnoughts is equipped with ten twelve-inch guns, only seven of these can be used in broadside fire. Now we are constructing in the United States three large ships, each of which will carry only eight twelve-inch guns, but the entire eight can be used broadside, thus giving us one more gun in broadside fire than England has on its largest ship.

"I have been gratified to learn as a result of attending the wireless telegraphy conference in Berlin that we also still lead in this science. The news that has just reached me of a new record for land messages from Pensacola to Point Lome, on the California Coast, 1,768 miles, shows that we are maintaining our supremacy. That was the first wireless message from the Atlantic to the Pacific overland. My observations abroad confirm the belief that the spark system of wireless telegraphy, which we use, has advantages over the Paulsen system. In the Paulsen system, used largely abroad, the current is said to be continuous, but is not of a frequency of oscillation as great as 700,000 per second. Some of the experts we met abroad hold that the Paulsen system will ultimately displace the spark system, because in some cases the spark must travel 2,300 miles to complete the circuit. This is a much greater distance than it has ever attained.

"I find we can still give foreigners points on cable construction. We are even ahead of the shipyards of Scotland, where I carefully examined the strands of cable and the methods of weaving. I also am convinced that the principle of the gyroscope, as employed in the Howell torpedo, is correct.

"Of the various naval yards and armament works I have visited, I believe none surpasses the establishment of the Krupps, in Germany. We are, of course, behind in this respect."

Admiral Manney will return to America next week.

GREAT BRITAIN MAY DESERT FREE TRADE

Tariff Reform is Now in the Forefront of English Political Issues.

COLONIES ARE INSISTENT

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, April 20.—American producers who have large trade relations with Great Britain should not ignore the fact that tariff reform is to-day in the fore front of political issues in this country. The report that went around the world just after the last general election that tariff reform was dead in Great Britain and would be forgotten as soon as free-traders should finish mauling the corpse was evidently greatly exaggerated. The tariff reform agitation is certainly the liveliest thing in British politics at this moment. Nobody knows what it will come to nor how soon the British electorate will have another go at it, but for the time being, at any rate, it looms up big. It is the leading topic of editorial writers and political orators, and is receiving much more serious attention than was given to it before the last election.

The discussion of at least one phase of the issue now appeals to practical men, whereas in 1905 the entire discussion was almost purely an academic question. Colonial preference is before the country now not in a hypothetical form, but as a substantial reality. It is no longer asked what ought Great Britain to do if the colonies come to her asking for some measure of commercial reciprocity. There are no ifs and ands now. The colonies have come to the mother country and are making demands for preference, and the question now is what is the mother country going to do about it. A condition, not a theory, confronts the British people now.

There is no lack of predictions that the demands of the colonies for preferential trade relations will force Great Britain to turn her back on Cobden free trade and espouse Chamberlain tariff reform. People tell us that is the logic of the situation in which the country now finds itself, and that to resist it would be tantamount to declaring for the dismemberment of the empire. Preference or disunion is the option these people offer. Other political mentors advise their countrymen not to get excited, and assure them that talk of the empire going to pieces if preferential trade is not established is all tommyrot.

It is impossible to say which set of counselors will mold public sentiment, but it would be silly to deny the possibility of a change in Great Britain's fiscal system in response to the colonial demands. And it is certain that the change, when fully developed, would impose heavy tolls on millions of dollars worth of American products that now enter the country free of duty.

AN "IMPERIAL CONFERENCE."

Permanent Organization Found by the British Premiers.

LONDON, April 20.—At to-day's session of the Colonial Conference it was unanimously agreed to change the title to "Imperial Conference." The conference will be held every four years for the purpose of discussing the common interests of the Empire. The Premier of the United Kingdom will be ex-officio President of the Imperial Conference, and the Premiers of the colonies and the Colonial Secretary will be ex-officio members. The various Governments will appoint other members, but, except with the special permission of the conference, not more than two representatives of each Government shall participate in the discussions. Each Government will have but one vote.

This new department of the Colonial Office is created with a permanent Secretarial staff, which is to be charged with the duty of obtaining information for the use of the conference and dealing tentatively with such matters of general Imperial interest as arise in the intervals between the conferences.

It has further been decided that when matters arise requiring the consultation of two or more Governments and which cannot conveniently be postponed until the next conference, a subsidiary conference may be held between especially chosen representatives of the Governments concerned.

The Earl of Elgin, Secretary of State for the Colonies, referring to the matter of military defense to-day, outlined the general principles of an imperial military organization, and the Premiers concurred in his views. The Premiers then explained the defense organizations of their respective colonies and the extent to which the general organization could be put into practice. The draft of a resolution creating a General Staff for the empire was tabled. It was resolved that the colonies be authorized to refer to the Committee of Imperial Defense for advice on local questions in which expert assistance is desirable.

Sir Robert Bond, the Premier of Newfoundland, attended the conference for the first time to-day. He was greeted cordially.

Apparently in response to the demand for greater publicity, the Colonial Office to-night issued a lengthy summary of the proceedings of the week. This summary covers mainly the discussions that preceded the adoption of the resolutions of to-day. The only striking feature communicated was the objection of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Premier of Canada, and Gen. Botha, Premier of the Transvaal, to designating the conference "Imperial Council." Gen. Botha thought the adoption of the word "Council" might be an infraction of the rights of the responsible Governments, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier suggested the title "Imperial Conference," which was adopted. All agreed that the conference should be consultative and advisory only, while the Earl of Elgin clinched matters by declaring that the establishment of a body with an independent status of authority would not be acceptable to his Majesty's Government.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Premier of the United Kingdom, gave a private dinner to the colonial Premiers at Downing Street to-night. Almost all the members of the Cabinet and a number of other prominent persons, including Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, were present.

EUROPE IS AMUSED AT PEACE CONGRESS

FUN POKED AT CARNEGIE

One Writer Suggests That He Endow a Chair of Contemporary History for His Own Instruction.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, April 20.—Europe paid very little attention to the New York Arbitration and Peace Congress. There were two reasons for its lack of interest. In the first place there are not a large number of peace propagandists on this side of the Atlantic. The prevailing view is that universal, permanent peace is a long way off, and that the only war questions worthy of consideration by practical men just now are those designed to bring about an agreement among civilized powers as to the manner in which wars shall be conducted.

In the second place, Europe thinks that Americans who talk peace in public places are apt either to talk piffle, or to profess sentiments more or less at variance with the National policies and aspirations of their own country. It is expressly pointed out that the item of its international policy on which America lays the greatest stress—that is to say the Monroe-Roosevelt-Root Doctrine—threatens the peace of the world continuously. Americans know it, we are told, and maintain an enormous navy because they know it, and they mean eventually to have a navy big enough to whip any force that may be sent across the Atlantic with the intent to dispute their right to manage the entire Western Hemisphere south of the Canadian line.

Moreover, Europeans are quite accustomed to reading in the public prints the prophecy that there will be war sooner or later between America and Germany, growing out of Germany's determination that America shall not interfere with her plans respecting South America. In other words, Europeans have not much appetite for peace preachments from a country they regard as quite as bumptious and warlike as any in the world.

London laughs at Mr. Carnegie's sayings and doings at the Peace Congress. It is especially amused at his scheme for establishing an international police to preserve the peace of the world. The Times good-naturedly calls Carnegie an ardent but ill-informed amateur, and remarks that with the hardihood of utter inexperience he has rushed in where sagacious statesmen fear to tread, and has set up a plan that nobody of consequence is likely to consider seriously. A member of the Athenaeum Club, in a letter to a London paper, says the passage of Carnegie's address in which, as a basis for his international police scheme, he cites the armed intervention of the powers in China during the Boxer movement, is crammed full of inaccuracies and misstatements. The writer of the letter tells Carnegie that if he should talk with the American officers who went through the Boxer campaign he would get from them precious little encouragement for his fantastic project.

The suggestion is also offered to Carnegie that he would do well to endow a chair of contemporary history for his own instruction.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 20.—With the budget consigned to the Finance Committee for examination and the attempt of the extremists to reject it in the House checked, a grave menace to the life of the Duma has been removed. But a new danger arises from the difference of opinion between the Government and the Finance Committee as to the right of the latter to summon expert financiers and accountants to help in the technical examination of the budget.

Rumor has it that Premier Stolypin will order the dissolution of the Duma should the committee insist on the exercise of its undoubted right. However, it is only fair to recall that the Premier has of late invariably acted more conservatively than was anticipated. Of course, the refusal to allow technical assistance revives all the rumors and gossip of the rottenness of Russian finances in general, and of this budget in particular.

Explaining the items of the budget, the Minister of Finance, who is a conservative man, said he expected that this year the shops at which the Government retails vodka would show a profit of 725,000,000 rubles; in other words, a sum far in excess of the customs and the mainstay of the Government. From this it is clear that if the Russian people would only be more temperate, or, if that is asking too much, they would for three months change their tipple from vodka to some other liquor, they could bring the still autocratic régime to its knees and obtain the habeas corpus act, more schools, more liberal landlords, and to the Duma larger powers.

All the leaders of the progressive groups with whom I have spoken in the last few days as to the feasibility of leaving the vodka shops alone for three months, agree in saying that the idea is Quixotic in the present state of social development. It is disheartening, but it should be borne in mind that while the desire for liberal institutions on the part of a large number of Russians is very strong, and while some of them are ready to sacrifice their lives in hopeless efforts, the great majority of the people are not willing to make a sacrifice which, in the opinion of all, would be effective and infringe upon no law.

There is another side, and by no means pleasant one, to the situation. Down the Volga, as Prince Lvoff told you by cable, nearly 1,000,000 people are starving, and in a much larger area the population is being decimated by typhus and scurvy. It is now practically certain that the Government will not give the 3,000,000 rubles which the Zemstvo relief organization, expected in order to continue its work. It is probable that the Government has not bte money, even such a petty sum, to give, and the money raised among the wealthy residents of St. Petersburg and Moscow in this crisis in the lives of so many fellow-Russians approximates the amount which would be raised in Paris or New York for the widow and orphans of a fireman or a policeman who died in the performance of his duty. Yet there is plenty of money forthcoming for other purposes every week in these two great cities. More money is squandered in theatres of an unedifying descriptions and cafés chantants than would be required to carry the starving safely through this crisis and until the next crops.

In the frowning Peter and Paul fortress, across the river, an incident happened on Wednesday, which, contrasted with the foregong, reveals the temperamental differences between the opposing forces in the social struggle.

Last week a young and beautiful girl was arrested for traveling on a forged passport, and was put in the fortress. The name on the passport was Najesda Dorojewa. Day after day the young woman was examined by the authorities, who suspected, probably rightly, that they had caught an important Terrorist. It is asserted that no threats were made or torture inflicted, but on Wednesday the young woman was found dead in her cell. She had torn out by the roots enough of her long black hair to make a noose, with which, tied to a bedpost, she choked herself to death.

"I was afraid they would make me tell," are the words of explanation she is said to have left on a scrap of paper.

SIGNOR TITTONI A CATSPAW?

What Will Italy Do in Case of an Anglo-German Conflict? Is the Question.

ROME, April 20.—The negotiations which are going on in regard to the Anglo-American proposition as to the discussion of the limitation of armaments at The Hague Conference offer an excellent illustration of the value and meaning of "official communications" in Europe.

On March 31 the German Imperial Chancellor, Prince Bülow, and the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Signor Tittoni, met at Rapallo, Italy, and, as they remained together for about three hours locked up in an apartment of the Imperial Palace Hotel, earnestly discussing, they could not say, as was their original intention, that their interview had the mere character of courtesy. So they published an official communication solemnly stating that an examination of all the political questions lying on the international table had shown once more the complete and full correspondence of ideas between the two statesmen was announced.

Although it was impossible to obtain an official declaration on the subject, it was known that the principal points of discussion between Prince Bülow and Signor Tittoni were about two questions; the present situation of the Triple Alliance, especially in view of a possible Anglo-German conflict, and the attitude of the different powers at The Hague Conference over the proposition of limiting armaments. With regard to the latter question, Signor Tittoni had already compromised himself by a statement made before the Italian Chamber on June 14, 1906, when Sir Edward Grey first announced the intention of the British Government to lead the movement to put a stop to the ruinous increase in the armies and navies of European powers. Then the Senator enthusiastically received the English scheme, and emphatically declared to the Chamber that he would give instructions to the Italian plenipotentiaries at The Hague rigorously to support it. It was understood that one of the principal objects of Prince Bülow at Rapallo was that of dampening Signor Tittoni's enthusiasm for the English proposition, and of recalling him to the necessity of Italy, as a member of the Dreibund, helping Germany in her campaign. Signor Tittoni could not, however, altogether disavow his own statement made in June, and so a middle way was found to save his face.

According to what is asserted by Bülow himself, Signor Tittoni accepted it with pleasure because it afforded him the opportunity of taking the initiative in a movement destined to bring about harmony among the different interests of European powers, and that is why in the official communication of the Rapallo meeting a "complete and full correspondence of ideas" between the two statesmen was announced.

Thus Signor Tittoni, as soon as he returned to Rome, hastened to send to the great powers of Europe and to the United States a proposition regarding the discussion on the limitation of armaments at The Hague, the real object of which was the postponement of a definite decision on the matter.

A few days after the Italian Minister must have been strangely surprised at having his proposition rejected, first of all by Germany, the Chancellor of which had been the inspiration and almost the compiler of the document, it forming the basis of the famous "complete and full correspondence of ideas."

Notwithstanding all official communications to the contrary and the most emphatic statements that politics have nothing to do with the visit of King Edward VII. to Gaeta and his meeting with King Victor Emmanuel III., the British and Italian sovereigns, on the classic shore of that town which was once called "the Gibraltar of Italy," where Cicero found death and Barbarossa built a cathedral, have discussed the Triple Alliance in its connection with England.

When the Alliance was originally formed in May, 1882, it was chiefly directed against France, so that Italy was sure the Alliance would not involve her in conflict with England; but when the Marquis Prinetti remade it in 1902 all allusion to France was omitted on account of the friendly relations re-established between Paris and Rome, in such a manner that it now reads that the reciprocal assistance which the contracting parties owe each other is in case of an aggression upon one of them.

Germany still insists that Italy is pledged to support her even in case of war against England. Italy maintains that, according to the original understanding, she was never and she is not now expected to fight Britain, on whose friendship depends her position in the Mediterranean, which is not guaranteed by the Dreibund. Indeed, Italy, according to trustworthy information, maintains that the disputed clause in the Triple Alliance must now be interpreted in the sense that Italian armed co-operation with Germany is only compulsory in case two powers, excluding England, should together attack the empire of the Kaiser.

Always in accordance with a "complete and full correspondence of ideas" it seems that the two statesmen at Rapallo did not come to any definite agreement on the subject, and that Bülow reserved to himself to propose such changes in the clauses of the Alliance and guarantees which the central empire may offer Italy as to make it possible for Italy openly to stand by Germany and even against England.

This move of Germany evidently did not escape the British Government, and King Edward, who does not wish to allow his imperial nephew to get the better of him, arranged the meeting at Gaeta, officially proclaimed to have no political object, to render the relations closer between the two reigning houses, to strengthen the bonds of traditional alliance in the Mediterranean between England and Italy, and to rearouse the strong Anglophile feeling of Signor Tittoni, often voluntarily expressed by him, both as Minister of Foreign Affairs and as Italian Ambassador to London.

Liberal Leader Accuses Metternich of Being Incompetent.

BERLIN, April 20.—Apropos of the meeting of the rulers of England and Italy, Dr. Hermann Paasche, a Parliamentary Vice President, says in an interview:

"What of it if King Edward really breakfasted with King Victor Emmanuel? We must be careful not to become nervous and only injure ourselves thereby. Few honest heads in England, after all, desire the disarmament which the Liberals promised when they assumed the Government. The burdens of the navy are becoming too heavy; besides, England has already enough ships. With its giant Dreadnoughts it surpasses all other powers. Therefore England desires to discontinue, which we cannot support."

Dr. Müller-Meiningen, a Liberal leader, does not consider the situation dangerous, but thinks it uncomfortable. He says: "German diplomats are much to blame for the present condition. From my visits to England I know that Ambassador Metternich is very incompetent. He has no relations with the commercial class, which inspires responsible politics in England. It is most surprising that the German Government retains him in office, although he has repeatedly demonstrated his incapacity."

BRITISH TRUST THEIR KING.

LONDON, April 20.—While the officials here minimize the importance of King Edward's tour of the Mediterranean, it cannot be denied that the visits to Cartagena and Gaeta were more than exchanges of courtesies between the monarchs of three powers. The presence of Sir Charles Hardinge, Permanent Under Secretary of the Foreign Office and King Edward's personal adviser in foreign affairs, stamps the meeting as being more than acts of civility.

Sir Charles joined the King upon his Majesty's departure for Biarritz, and has been at his side ever since, and, besides, he has had conferences with the Foreign Ministers of Spain and Italy. That The Hague Peace Confsrence has been one of the subjects discussed cannot be doubted, but it probably will be found that the main interest lies in another direction. As a prominent diplomat expressed it to-day:

"Recent events point to the restoration of the Mediterranean to its old primacy, by which the relations between the great powers were determined."

What King Edward is aiming at, some well-informed persons contend, is a Latin union, supported by Great Britain, for the maintenance of the status quo in the great inland sea. Whatever connection Italy has with the plans must have arisen since King Edward's departure from England, as it was not until after his arrival at Malta that his Majesty instructed the Foreign Office to arrange for a meeting with King Victor Emmanuel.

Whether there will be other conferences has not been made public, but it is certain that King Edward's tour, which commenced with a friendly call on King Alfonso at Cartagena, has been gathering importance as it progressed, and the British, with the greatest confidence in the diplomacy of their King, are looking forward to announcements of agreements, such as that entered into with France.

GERMANY TO GO SLOW ON DISARMAMENT

Prince Carolath Says She Is Surrounded by Strongly Armed States.

PEOPLE MUST STOP WAR

Popular Sentiment in Favor of Peace Is More Effective Than the Work of Any Conference.

BERLIN, April 20.—Prince Henry Carolath, who is a member of the Reichstag and belongs to the Parliamentary Group of Peace, said in an interview to-day apropos of the Carnegie-Muensterborg dispute:

"Germany, situated in the heart of Europe, surrounded by powerful States which themselves are strongly armed, must be very careful to examine the proposition of disarmament, as she is confronted by double and triple dangers. It would be very difficult to put the question of disarmament in a precise form or paragraph, but this does not exclude Germany as unwilling to participate in the consideration of the matter, provided she finds it of much practical value.

"As heavily as her armament rests on Germany, so truthfully can it be asserted that the largest part of the German people willingly bear it in order to preserve the independence and power of the Fatherland. More important, however, than all conferences I consider the emphasis of peace on the part of every individual desirous of it, for out of themselves from their inner feeling the people of Europe must daily strengthen the peace idea rather than through written paragraphs which can be interpreted in various ways and in a serious case would be binding on no one.

"Who wishes to assume the enormous responsibility of war? Even the victorious party would have to bear the severest wounds. The enormous losses in human life and property in the bloody Russo-Japanese war must frighten even the most bloodthirsty. Therefore, a Peace Conference like the one soon to be held at The Hague has before it a great and beautiful task on the lines of international law, as well as other subjects. It is to be hoped that Germany, true to her traditions and mission, will also in this congress be active in the interest of humanity and the fraternization of nations.

"I see in the trip of King Edward no reason for concern on the part of Germany. That the King's interest in his own country is active is evident, but from this I by no means draw the conclusion of danger to Germany. The high qualities of the King, his common sense, and his love of peace must be recognised everywhere. Germany and England must remain friends, and will if the quiet, intelligent men of both countries allow themselves to be influenced by nothing, but work hand in hand."

BERLIN, April 20.—While Ernst Ritter von Possart, the well-known actor-manager of Munich, has had no offer, formal or otherwise, to succeed Heinrich Conried, he declares that he is willing to go to the United States and at liberty to entertain a possible offer to assume the direction of the Metropolitan Opera House. On being asked for his opinion in regard to the operatic conditions in New York, he said:

"I am not in a position to judge, but opera there must be of a high degree of excellence, as the best singers in the world are engaged. Do I think it possible to place the ensemble, the orchestral effects, and the mise-en-scène on the same plane as in the first opera houses of Europe? In America all things are possible."

Herr Possart since his retirement from the Royal Opera in Munich has devoted his time to public readings, besides putting the finishing touches to his work on "The Technique of Histrionic Art," which is to appear in July. The volume represents the first attempt to formulate the principles of actor craft denoted by the title. Herr Possart is 66 years of age.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Prussian Government has closed the public kindergartens at Charlottenburg, which were established a few years ago on reform lines, permitting no religious instruction. The reason given by the Government is that the children have become infected with Socialistic doctrines.

Charlottenburg, which is now practically a part of Berlin, is a centre of porcelain manufacture, and this fact, combined with the presence of the Technical Academy, the students of which have strong Socialistic proclivities, has made the place a conspicuous auxiliary in the propaganda of Herr Bebel's party.

The closing of the kindergartens, however, must be considered as a rebuke to parents rather than to children, for the pupils were instructed in games and the more simple mechanical arts rather than in reading, &c.

DISAPPOINTMENT FOR HOME RULERS

Little Prospect of Any Important Legislation for Ireland at This Session.

ENVOYS TOO OPTIMISTIC

The Situation Does Not Come Up to What Was Forecast in Their Speeches in America.

LONDON, April 20.—The Americans who contributed with more than ordinary liberality to the home rule fund when the envoys of the Nationalist Party paid their last visit to the United States are likely to be disappointed with the Irish legislation that will be obtained at this session of Parliament. The envoys aroused expectations which will hardly be realized.

Lord Rosebery, in a recent speech before the Council of the Liberal League, probably spoke wisely when he predicted that the Government would not undertake to pass an extreme Irish measure, but would be content with a bill relating chiefly to administration, with provisions unobjectionable to the members of his league. If John Redmond cared to make a prediction, there is good reason to believe it would not differ much from Lord Rosebery's. I am inclined to think that he has sadly acknowledged to himself the appositeness of Lord Rosebery's picturesque remark about the speeches of the Prime Minister, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and the Lord Chancellor, in which they declared themselves out and out Home Rulers and impressed the country with the conviction that the Government intended to bring forward at this session some very radical Irish legislation.

"If," said Lord Rosebery, "you blow horns with a blast calculated to make the walls of Jericho fall down, and at the end produce only one very insignificant brick, you are bound to get into difficulties."

Mr. Redmond and his associates in the House of Commons act and talk today as though the utmost of their hopes were to carry home to Ireland at the close of the Parliamentary session Lord Rosebery's insignificant little brick.

"How much is the Government going to do for the home rule cause?" I asked Mr. Redmond a day or two ago.

"I can't answer that question," he replied, and no doubt his words should be interpreted literally. He doesn't know. No more does the Government. Lord Rosebery thinks the Irish question is considered an open one by the Government, and that seems a reasonable view. It is an open question because the members of the Government are not all Home Rulers like Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Mr. Birrell. It is an open question because the Government does not know how far the House of Lords would follow it on the road to home rule.

All in all, the situation does not quite come up to what was forecast by the Irish envoys in their American speeches. It is fair, however, to say that they were probably sincere when they said Ireland was nearer home rule than ever before. If any fault is to be found with them, it is that they were a bit too exuberant in their optimism.

French Court Finds the Testator's Domicile Was Paris and New York Law Does Not Apply.

PARIS, April 20.—A case of particular interest to Americans has been decided in the Paris courts with reference to the disposition of the Charles G. Spencer property. This estate is a large one, exceeding $2,000,000, three-fifths of which consists of real estate. The rest is personal property.

Mr. Cachard, the well-known American lawyer in Paris, undertook the case on behalf of the Princess de Vicovaro, a sister of the deceased.

Charles G. Spencer was born in New York in 1856. He was the son of Lorillard Spencer and Sarah J. Griswold Spencer, originally of New York. The Spencers had for children three sons, William Augustus Spencer, who lives in Paris; Lorillard Spencer, who resides in New York, and Charles G. Spencer, the testator, and one daughter, Eleanore, Princess Cenci de Vicovaro. Prince Vicovaro was Master of Ceremonies for King Humbert. The Princess is lady in waiting for Queen Margherita.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorillard Spencer came from New York in 1866 with their children and settled in Paris. Spencer had a large fortune and was a prominent member of the American colony until the time of his death in Paris in 1888. The widow continued to reside in Paris till she died, two years ago. William Augustus Spencer and Charles G. Spencer were educated in Europe and have made Paris their residence ever since.

As a young man Charles studied art and was a student of Carolus-Duran. He died in Paris on the 17th of November last. He left two wills, one drawn up in 1882, by which he divided all his property between his two brothers and his sister. The second, which he made in Newport, dated Aug. 3, 1898, left the whole fortune to his sister. This latter is made in autographic form, that is, written, dated, and signed by the testator and not attested by witnesses.

This will was filed in France, and, by order of the court, the Princess De Vicovaro received envoi de possession, that is, the ownership of the estate was granted to her. An appeal was made by William and Lorillard to have the verdict set aside, for the reason that the will was not made in conformity with the law of Rhode Island, and that Charles was domiciled in New York. The case was heard before Judge Ditte and the appeal was rejected. The Princess was able to establish by numerous declarations that Charles had always lived in Paris since his youth, with the exception of a few visits to America. The envoi de possession is a matter in the discretion of the Judge. It is improbable that hte order of the court will be reversed.

On being questioned, Mr. Cachard said: "As a matter of law, it can be set down as an absolute proposition that, according to the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of New York, the will of personal property should be made according to the law of the domicile of the testator at the time of his death. As to the real estate, the will must be made in accordance with the law of the State of New York, namely, signed by the testator in the presence of two witnesses. The law is not troublesome in such cases, but what gives rise to uncertainty in many disputes is the difficulty of establishing the domicile of the testator.

"The French law on the subject is different. The personal status of individuals is governed by their nationality, not by the law of domicile." Mr. Cachard said that from many years of experience it was his opinion that it was easier to apply the French law, because it was simpler to determine a man's nationality than to show where he was domiciled.

PARIS, April 20.—Georges Clemenceau this week is even more than usual the centre of the stage in France. On Monday the Premier engaged in a controversy which is succinctly described by many papers under the heading, "Clemenceau against Jeanne d'Arc." Others see him master of the field, with his shadowy opponent ranged on the side of this master dialectician and with her aureole enhanced by the brilliant touch of his pen.

It is characteristic of the man that he seems to go into a controversy as an Irishman does, for the pure love of the fight; he is not afraid of hard knocks, and generally deals harder ones in return. Edouard Drumont, Guy de Cassagnac, and other clerical publicists have dubbed him "Monsieur, aoh yes?" and affected to believe that he attacked Jeanne d'Arc at the behest of his lord and master, Edward VII.

At the outset M. Clemenceau did not seem to have a single friend or supporter in this matter; now no one dares enter the lists against him.

Orléans was preparing to hold on May 8 the annual festival commemorative of the delivery of the city from the English. The news that the President of the Council had decided that the civil and military authorities were not to be allowed to take part in the celebration under exactly similar conditions as those in previous years fell like a bombshell in the town. Both the Deputies from Orléans are Radicals; the Mayor and Municipal Council are also Radicals. The Deputies and a delegation of city Aediles came hot-foot to Paris to endeavor to induce the Premier to alter his decision, which, they said, would seriously endanger the business interests of the city.

The Orléanais have always regarded the festival as a patriotic one in which all classes of the community join without regard to differences of political and religious opinion. It was a tradition for the clergy to take a prominent part in the procession which formed the feature in the celebration, and equally a tradition that representatives of the army, the magistracy, and other constituted authorities figure alongside the clergy. The city could not be accused of clericalism, as both its representatives in Parliament had voted for the Separation law.

M. Clemenceau asked nothing better than to have such arguments advanced. He is in his element when tearing an argument to shreds; no one is more competent than he to see the weak points in an opponent's logic. His enemies say that Clemenceau, who revealed himself as a journalist when four years of age, has been unable to resist his journalistic tendencies even since he became Minister. However, as one observer puts it, Clemenceau governs with the pen.

He replied with a letter to Deputy Rabier and the other Orléanais who sought to change the Ministerial mind. They had argued that his decision meant a derogation from the wonted observances.

"Do I need to inform you," asked Clemenceau, "that the evolution of societies is only to be accomplished by a progressive abandonment of certain wonted observances and traditions and the substitution of others? When France through its Parliamentary representatives voted the separation of Church and State, it abandoned one of those wonted observances, one of those secular traditions. This great fact has changed much more than the trivial question of precedence in the procession."

With biting sarcasm the Premier referred to the argument that the commercial interests of Orléans would be damaged by interference with the festival:

"I do not fail to grasp the importance of such considerations, but if the business interests of Orléans had need of such ceremonies, you should have thought of that before voting the Separation law."

There remain many traditions which M. Clemenceau is urged by his supporters to break. One of them is the rule of abstinence from meat on Fridays which prevails in the army and public schools. "The secret of good government is foresight," exclaims one of the Premier's admirers, who goes on to say that Clemenceau showed an undeniable proof of that quality when he took steps precluding the possibility of the military and civil authorities having to listen at Orléans to a pulpit denunciation of the Government such as Père Ollivier indulged in on that famous occasion in the Cathedral of Notre Dame.

"Clemenceau & Co." is the current description of the Cabinet of Clemenceau; not only is he his own President of the Council, he is the one man in it to count.

The latest developments at Orléans indicate that the Joan of Arc celebration is likely to be a purely civil one. M. Clemenceau laid down the law that the clergy participating should not carry crucifixes in procession. The Bishop of Orléans refuses to allow the clergy to take part unless they are headed by a cross.

LONDON, April 20.—An extraordinarily large number of Americans have arrived in England from the Continent this week, homeward bound. The steamship agents say they never before have known so heavy a demand for accommodations on westbound ships at this time of the year. All the best ships that sailed for America this week carried big loads of cabin passengers. This unusual westward rush seems to indicate that a remarkable number of Americans have taken the Mediterranean trip from New York this year, and are now returning home after a tour of the Continent.

He has entertained considerably at Claridge's, and has also given several theatre parties this week. He seems none the worse for his relaxation, his tennis form being practically perfect. Great sympathy is felt for Mrs. John W. Mackay and Countess Telfener on the death of their mother, which has just taken place in Rome. This event, of course, will prevent Mrs. Mackay from entertaining this season and will so deprive her hundreds of American and English friends of a great deal of pleasure. Her beautiful home in Carlton Terrace has been the scene of many delightful entertainments which have been graced by the presence of the leading people in London society. In spite, however, of Mrs. Mackay's great social success, her intimate friends say she has not known any real happiness since the death of her elder and favorite son through a riding accident in Paris.

Dominiguez has been very energetic in her efforts to find objects of interest. Mme. Dominiguez is the daughter of the late D. T. Murphy of New York. She is a very charming woman, extremely popular in the American colony and also in diplomatic circles. Her brother-in-law is the Argentine Minister, James Dominiguez having succeeded his father, who held the post for fourteen years, until his death in 1899.

The Princess is a tall, dark girl, with a sweet face and beautiful brown eyes. Her old friends are not astonished to hear that she is already very popular in Roman society. The young couple have just been on a motor trip with the Duke and Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein.

Mrs. Gerard Lowther's book on Morocco interests her society friends in London exceedingly. It reminds them of the faculty she has often displayed in her conversation of giving vivid, almost photographic, pictures of scenes she had encountered. She has lived in Morocco ever since she married, two years ago, her husband being the British Minister there. She was Miss Blight of New York, one of the three pretty daughters of Atherton Blight. Her father is a literary man, so it is not difficult to trace the source of Mrs. Lowther's literary tendency. It is quite as easy to trace her good looks to her mother, who was Miss Greenough of New York, a famous beauty in her time.

Ambassador Reid gave a stag luncheon at Dorchester House on Thursday to Basil Miles, Third Secretary of the American Embassy at St. Petersburg, who is on his way to America on leave of absence. AMERICANS AUTOING IN ITALY

The Douglas Robinsons, Mrs. Hanna, and Senator Aldrich There.

ROME, April 20.—Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson and daughter have left a markedly pleasant remembrance behind them, their departure coming all too soon. They motored from Rome to Orvieto, where they were anxious to see the magnificent cathedral, which is one of the best examples of the Italian Gothic style, dating as far back as the end of the thirteenth century. They then proceeded to Perugia, where, having been strongly recommended by Deputy Pompili, Under Secretary of State of Foreign Affairs, to Count Valentini, the Mayor of the town, they had the privilege of visiting the gorgeous exhibition of Ancient Umbrian art which will not be opened to the public until the 29th of this month.

Assisi was next on their programme, where they were enchanted with the Church of St. Francis, which has been proclaimed the most artistic temple in Italy, being the shrine of Giotto's most celebrated frescoes, besides of those of Cimabue, only just less precious. It also contains the crypt with the tomb of St. Francis.

Another American who is enjoying motoring very much in Italy is Mrs. Hanna, widow of the Senator, who is visiting the peninsula for the first time and is now sorry to have so short a time here, as she has already engaged passage from Cherbourg for the end of May on the same steamer on which she came over.

***

Senator Aldrich, on the other hand, is not here for the first time, and finds his automobiling most enjoyable, but, unfortunately, in these last few days Mrs. Aldrich and their daughters have been indisposed.

The number of Americans motoring in Italy has more than doubled within the last two years, the increase being put down to various causes; but I am inclined to think it is due to increasing prosperity in the United States, as motoring at present is very expensive here.

However, next month a reduction in the price of petroleum goes into force, and it will then only cost 10 cents a litre, as in France. Bad roads will still remain, however, but they are always preferable to railways.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is here, enjoying the company of her son, Stevens Sands, who is private secretary to Ambassador Griscom, and in this capacity was received at private audience by the King in the Quirinal. His Majesty paid him a most flattering compliment, saying: "It was like you that Count Cavour began his diplomatic career."

Mrs. Hungerford had a very modest funeral in a small Chapel of the Sacred Heart Church. Following the desire she expressed, her remains will ultimately rest in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, in the Mackay tomb.

KAISER REWARDS PRINCE.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Kaiser on the occasion of the silver wedding of Prince George of Schaumburg-Lippe and Princess Marie Anna of Saxe-Altenburg, who were married twenty-five years ago this week, presented to the couple the family ancestral seat, Castle Schaumburg, located in the district of Ritelen, Prussia, and close to the Schaumburg border.

The gift is doubtless in recognition of Prince George's services in supporting the Kaiser's candidate in the recent dispute over the succession to the throne of Lippe-Detwold. The castle was acquired by the grandfather of the Kaiser when, in 1866, Schaumburg-Lippe threw in its lot with Austria.

BERLIN, April 20.—An important step of wide interest to women has been announced in the Prussian Diet. Herr von Studt, the Minister of Education, declared that in future girls who wished to become merely housewives would enter the so-called lyceums, while others who wished to study at the universities would enter the girls' gymnasiums.

In the lyceums cooking, hygiene, domestic economy, and the care of infants will be taught, while the girls in the gymnasiums will learn the academic subjects taught at the boys' gymnasiums.

DISTRUSTS THE DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Julius Tower at Spandau, the strongly fortified tower at the confluence of the Havel and Spree, only eight miles from Berlin, where the $30,000,000 gold war indemnity obtained from France is deposited as an emergency fund, has for some time been in a very bad condition. It is now undergoing repairs.

Twenty-five years ago the Tower, which is the principal key to the defense of Berlin, was considered a fortress of the first class. But that was in the days of spherical cannot shot and granite fortifications. Cone projectiles and greater velocity and penetration have rendered granite practically useless and caused it to be supplanted by turf and concrete.

Prof. Friedrich Paulsen, the distinguished philosopher of Berlin University, in discussing the Carnegie Peace Conference in New York, said that Germany must view the question of disarmament with the greatest reserve. He added that Germany's action in repairing obsolete fortifications must not be received with distrust.

BERLIN, April 20.—The Dukes of Mecklenburg-Schwerin are much in the public eye nowadays. The ruling Grand Duke, Frederick Francis IV., is about to grant to his country a Constitution. Duke John Albert is to be made Regent of Brunswick. Everybody remembers the gallant deed of Duke Henry, who as Prince of the Netherlands did rescue work off the Hook of Holland two or three months ago. And now comes the announcement that Duke Adolf Frederick is soon to leave home on an exploring tour through German East Africa.

The trip is to last one year and a half. The Duke declares that he wishes to traverse the region once visited by Schweinfurth, whose reports, however, were lost. The Duke's interest in the colony dates from the time he visited Lake Victoria for a period of three months. The leading scientific institutions of Germany are financially and otherwise aiding the Duke. The expedition will make its way to the Red Sea and reach Mombasa, in British East Africa, and then proceed on the British Uganda Railroad from Bukobe to the northwest of German East Africa. The next endeavor will be to reach Kiwu Lake and the Anglo-German boundary still unexplored. Moreover, scientific investigations will be conducted into the diseases existing in the colony.

BERLIN, April 20.—The University of Giessen, in Upper Hesse, one of the oldest in Germany, will celebrate its three hundredth anniversary in July. Representatives of the leading universities of the world, including those of America, will be present.

The University of Giessen was founded in 1607 by the Landgrave Louis V. It has a fine library, particularly rich in specimens of early German printing, and has a botanic garden, an observatory, an anatomical theatre, &c. Its attendance, however, is not in keeping with its provisions, for less than 500 students are regularly in attendance.

AN INCIDENT IN A RECENT PARIS STRIKE.

CITIZEN BORIS QUET MAKING A SPEECH AT CORBEIL, NEAR PARIS

PARIS, April 20.—The number of striking waiters here is diminishing rapidly. In most instances the employers granted the waiters' demand of the right to wear a mustache. About 280 waiters still refuse to return to work, objecting to agreeing to pay for breakages.

The Post Office authorities have dealt severely with the employes who signed the recent violent manifesto against Premier Clemenceau. Three of them were dismissed this afternoon.

The Government is recognizing the growing dangerarising from the violent strike propaganda now being conducted throughout the country by the agents of the Confederation of Labor, and in an effort to stem the movement the Minister of Justice, M. Guyot-Dessaigne, has addresed a circular to the public prosecutors requesting them to take prompt and energetic measures to enforce the laws against rebellion, the provocation of crime, and anti-militarism.

DRAMATIST'S PLEA FOR FRENCHWOMEN

AMERICAN FIGURES IN IT

PARIS, April 20.—"La Francaise," the play designed by the author, M. Brieux, to initiate a campaign for the rehabilitation of Frenchwomen in the eyes of the world, was produced on Thursday at the Odéon with considerable success. Brieux considers Americans among the worst offenders in the matter of believing Frenchwomen to be as black as they are painted in yellow-backed novels and boulevard comedies, and consequently he puts an American, Bartlett by name, through the process of having his eyes opened to the real character and virtue of the wives and maidens of this country.

All of Bartlett's previous knowledge on this subject had been gained from miscellaneous reading, common gossip, and a trip to Paris, where, outside of the Grand Hotel, he met a well-dressed young man who volunteered his services in introducing the American visitor to certain so-called ladies of the great world. Bartlett meets at Trouville the young, pretty, and rather coquettish Madame Marthe Gontier, whose husband has business dealings with the American. Bartlett misunderstands Marthe's manner toward him, scents an adventure, and kisses her. She repels him with such sincere indignation that he is dumfounded. But at last the scales fall from his eyes and he sees that there are in France wives who love their husbands and remain true to them through good and evil report.

The subsidiary plot gives M. Brieux an opportunity of teaching a lesson in regard to the bringing up of the French girl. He would like her to have greater liberty and opportunities, like American girls, and grow up as comrades of the youth of the other sex. He points out the danger of the system under which every French girl must have a dowry, and which makes marriage a business transaction. He is a warm partisan of love matches, and he draws a comparison between New York girls who have a keen sense of the necessities of modern life, and French girls who "remain deliciously attached to sentiments which charmed their feminine ancestors."

In the words of a reviewer, M. Brieux, "without minimizing the value of the attributes and qualities of a new, young nation like America, loves the tradition-nurtured delicacy of soul of our girls and women and loves his country for the beauty of its past. Old houses and discreet sentiment alike exercise an undeniable influence which even Americans feel. By age, qualities, and defects Franco is aristocratic, but it would be unjust to believe that she is a decrepit, decadent nation. On the contrary, she daily gives proofs of energy and vitality."

The picture of French domestic life Brieux presents is very different from that usually set before the eyes of readers of the literature in vogue. As one of the characters in the play says: "Our novelists and playwrights seem insensible to the charms of peaceful domesticity. They portray exceptional beings of unbridled passions and insatiable temperament. They appear not to see the quiet happiness of the majority of the people. They are like doctors attracted by abnormal cases, and forget there are in this country millions of sane, healthy, honorable people."

The Coming Sothern-Marlowe Engagement—Edna May's Retirement.

LONDON, April 20.—Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe will appear during their London engagement at the Waldorf Theatre, which has not housed a successful theatrical undertaking since, on its completion about two years ago, it was leased to the Shubert Brothers. It is a beautiful theatre, admirably planned and charmingly furnished, but hitherto much neglected by theatregoers. Mr. Sothern's and Miss Marlowe's American friends in London regret that their plays are to be given at this house, but the actors themselves are not worrying about other people's bad fortune. They rather expect to change the theatre's luck, they say.

They will present plays of the same class that Mr. Tree runs at His Majesty's Theatre, and naturally comparisons will be made between their productions and Tree's. Their friends in this city are confident that they will easily stand the test of this comparison. It seems a certainty that they will escape the criticism directed against Mr. Tree in London as well as in Berlin that he depends more on spectacular effects than on good acting in his appeals for popularity. Germans were quite indignant at the liberties Tree took with Shakespeare, and it is believed that London holds a very large number of Shakespearean scholars who, knowing Tree's ways, sympathize with German impatience.

The Sothern-Marlowe manager says the Americans have come prepared to mount their plays superbly, but their main dependence, in their efforts to win over London, will be the excellent acting of themselves and their company.

Another theatre that has done poorly ever since its rebuilding is the Savoy. It was there that Mrs. Leslie Carter went to pieces and that Maxine Elliott met with failure not long ago. It is announced now that Vedrenne and Barker, who have been so successful with Shaw's plays at the Court Theatre, have leased the Savoy. They will open there in the Autumn with a new Shaw play. It may be a successful venture, but some wise ones shake their heads.

John Hare's play, in which he has appeared as Napoleon Bonaparte, is a failure and will be withdrawn in a few days. Hare has not fared well for the last two years. It has been his fate to undertake to make impossible plays successful. His friends hope he will presently get a congenial part in a really good play.

Edna May's stage career will end next Saturday. Soon after will come her wedding day. She will be greatly missed, for she has innumerable admirers in London who enjoy seeing her on the stage. She says hundreds of these people are calling on her for keepsakes, asking generally for gloves or slippers.

"I'm afraid I shall have to buy a lot of second-hand gloves and slippers in order to satisfy the demand," the fair Edna remarked to a London reporter.

The last night of Edna May will also be the last night of the play in which she has been appearing.

***

Huntley Wright, one of the most popular London comedians, will be seen in New York in the Autumn under the management of Charles Frohman in a leading comedy rôle in "The Dairy Maids." Paul Rubens is writing some new songs for Wright to introduce in the play.

ANCIENT CHURCH FOUND.

BERLIN, April 20.—The remains of an old Christian church decorated with mosaics have been discovered in Apulia, Southern Italy, by the Berlin scientist Dr. Haveloff. The little church is in Casa-Anello, a suburb of Casarano in Terradotranto, and is rich in mural decorations dating from the sixth century.

Apulia has long been a centre of German scientific investigation. The late Prof. Mommsen did much toward tracing the origin of the dialect of the people, which reveals a striking Greek influence. The little church at Casa-Anello, of course, dates from the period when Byzantine influence in art was deeply felt in Southern Italy.

BERLIN, April 20.—The German-American tariff modus vivendi is not having entirely smooth sailing. Officials of both countries try to make one believe that there will be opposition in the Reichstag, although eventually that body will probably pass the measure. The Economic Committee now has the matter in hand.

The Imperial Parliament is discussing the third reading of the foreign budget, and will soon consider the tariff matter. Some opposition is certain to be expressed by the Agrarian members of the Centrum, an influential union of husbandry. Dr. Rösicke, the Secretary of the union, whose membership is 600,000, said in an interview:

"We are waiting to hear the official agreement of the two countries, but we shall not support the modus vivendi unless the United States makes adequate compensation in return for what Germany does. We will bitterly oppose the concessions in regard to meat."

Dr. Rösicke does not personally believe that Germany will allow a tariff war.

AWKWARD FOR THE SULTAN.

Ambassador Leishman Makes an Adroit Move on the School Question.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 20.—Ambassador Leishman has made a new move in the American schools question, by which he has placed the Porte in the awkward position of appearing to thwart the will of the Sultan.

In his last communication to the Foreign Office the Ambassador pointedly called attention to the fact that, notwithstanding the formal promises and pledges of the Sultan that a satisfactory settlement of the schools question would be arranged, the Porte has utterly failed to carry out the Imperial assurances.

The action of Mr. Leishman in thus holding the Porte responsible for the delay is regarded in diplomatic circles here as being very adroit. Even Turkish circles admit that it places the Government in the unenviable light of seeming to oppose the execution of the Sultan's promises.

HOKE SMITH IN BERLIN.

BERLIN, April 20.—Hoke Smith, Governor-elect of Georgia; William W. Williamson, President of the Savannah Chamber of Commerce, and G. Gunby Jordan, President of the Emigration Association of Georgia, have arrived here from New York. They are visiting Germany in order to study the emigration question, with the view of the development of the resources of Georgia and other South Atlantic States.

At Bremen they tried to induce the North German Lloyd Company to establish a direct emigrant line to Savannah and Charleston, and met with encouragement. The Americans are not trying to do anything to promote German emigration immediately, realizing that the industrial prosperity of this country is now so great that very few Germans are willing to emigrate. Mr. Smith and his associates start for Vienna to-morrow. They believe that the outlook for increasing the emigration of some of the Austrian-Hungarian races to the South Atlantic States is better than he prospects of inducing Germans to go there just now.

Hotel, restaurant, and shop keepers, and all the other various classes of the population who directly benefit by the annual invasion, are smilingly calculating their profits on the basis of transatlantic visitors, who promise this year to be more numerous than ever before and to have more money to spend than ever. Only the ingrained pessimists fear that the general ferment in labor circles and the possible strike troubles will keep away any intending visitors. The central boulevards, the Rue de la Paix, the Avenue de l'Opéra, and the Champs Elysées already show unmistakable signs of the annual invasion.

HOW SPAIN GREETS AN HEIR TO THRONE

MODEL NURSERY IS READY

It is a curious fact that the Court of Spain, which is generally supposed to be the most formal and autocratic Court in all Europe, does on certain occasions show itself even more democratic than a republic. Nothing, for example, could be more familiar and intimate than the publicity given the event in the Spanish royal household, which it is expected will present Spain with an heir to the throne. Although the ceremony of the "presentation" of the newly born royal Prince or Infanta is of a most solemn character, carried out with extraordinary pomp and ceremony, it is also a function in which a Spaniard, from the grandest hidalgo to the most slovenly beggar of the Puerta del Sol, takes a personal and enthusiastic interest.

What Americans would certainly consider an extraordinary document has just been published, signed with the royal signature, in the Gaceta de Madrid. It formally announces the proximity of the eagerly awaited event, and provides for the offices and demeanor of the Court, Government, and foreign representatives on that auspicious occasion. The document reads as follows:

Royal Decree.

In order that the ceremonies which must take place in connection with the approaching accouchement of my dear and beloved spouse, when the Almighty permits that so happy an event shall be realized, may be carried out with all the customary solemnity, I make the following decree:

Article I. There shall attend at the presentation of the Prince of Asturias, or Infanta, who may be born, the Ministers of the Crown, the chief officers of the palace, a deputation from each of the legislative bodies, the Commissioners of Asturias, a commission of two personages nominated by the Grandees of Spain, the Commanders in Chief of the army and navy, the Knights of the Noble Order of the Golden Fleece, a commission of two persons from each of the supreme assemblies of the Royal Orders of Carlos III. and Isabel the Catholic, another commission of the same number of individuals from each of the worshipful assemblies of the renowned military order of St. John of Jerusalem in the Provinces of Aragon and Castile and of the four military orders; the Presidents of the Council of State, of the Supreme Tribunal, of the Exchequer, and of the Supreme Council of War; a commission of two persons from the Supreme Tribunal of the Rota, the Archbishop of Toledo, those who have been Ambassadors, the Presidents of the Higher Consulative Committees of War and Marine, the Capitan General of New Castile, the Governor of the Province of Madrid, the Mayor of the Municipality of Madrid, a commission of the councilors of the same municipality nominated by the corporation, the Directors and inspectors of all arms, and a commission from the collegiate body of the nobility.

Article II. The foreign diplomatic body shall be invited to attend the ceremony under the direction of the Introducer of Ambassadors.

Article III. As soon as evident signs of the approaching confinement shall be noticed the personages above mentioned shall be advised, so that they may repair, in uniform, to the apartments of the palace set apart for the purpose.

Article IV. The birth having taken place, the Mistress of the Robes shall immediately bring the fact to the knowledge of the President of my Council of Ministers, who shall announce the auspicious event, informing them of the sex of the child, and shall communicate it to the Capitan General of Madrid and the Commander of the Halberdiers, so that, with all possible celerity, they may give the signals and salutes mentioned in the following article.

Article V. In order that the inhabitants of the most heroic town of Madrid may know without delay whether the newly born child is a Prince or an Infanta, there shall be hoisted in the first case the Spanish flag over that part of the royal palace known as the Punta del Diamante, and there shall be fired a salute of twenty-one guns at the customary places; in the second case, the flag shall be white, and the salute shall be fifteen guns. Should the birth take place at night, a light of the appropriate color shall be placed beneath the flag.

Article VI. Accompanied by the Mistress of the Robes and the chief officers of the palace, I will present the newly born child to the diplomatic body and other personages assembled in the palace in virtue of the present decree.

Article VII. The Minister of Grace and Justice, as principal notary of the kingdom, shall commit to writing a record of the birth and the presentation when the ceremony is concluded.

Article VIII. The present decree shall be communicated by the President of my Council of Ministers to all the Ministers and to my principal Chamberlain for its punctual fulfillment.

Given at the palace this 3d day of April, 1907.

ALFONSO.

Antonio Maura y Montaner, President of the Council of Ministers.

It will be observed that the royal document mentions representatives of Asturias who are invited to attend the "presentation." Others who are not specially referred to are the "Monteros de Espinosa." The former come from the ancient principality, in virtue of an old "fuero," or privilege, which conferred upon them the right of being the first to know the Prince of Asturias. As a general rule, the deputation consists of four or five persons nominated by the authorities of the province. The Monteros de Espinosa are palace officials, who are charged with "watching the sleep" of the Kings and Queens of Spain, standing for this purpose before the door of the bedchamber from 8 o'clock at night until 8 o'clock in the morning. They must all be "hijosdalgo," (nobles,) and the office is hereditary, being transmitted from family to family. It dates from the time of the Counts of Castile, having been instituted by Count Sancho Garcia, the life of whose first-born was saved by a "montero" (huntsman) of the town of Espinosa. Thenceforward the town has been known as Espinosa de los Monteros, and the officials whose duty it is to watch over the sleeping sovereigns were named Monteros de Espinosa. To-day the office is purely an honorary one, but the Monteros maintain their privilege and attend the ceremony in order to begin symbolically to protect the life of the Prince of Asturias.

Hygienic Nursery Prepared.

The apartments destined for the royal baby present a curious anomaly with the rest of the old palace. For the last two months English furnishers and decorators, carpenters and masons, have been at work under the direction of Dr. Glendinning, Queen Victoria Eugénie's private physician, making the apartments not only comfortable, but also thoroughly hygienic in the most modern sense of the word. All the useless ornaments and paraphernalia of babyhood which surrounded the infancy of past Spanish monarchs, even including the historical cradle of Ferdinand VII., have been removed. A simple, uncanopied iron crib now stands between the windows, from the light of which Charles IV. was once screened by the most elaborately embroidered draperies. All hangings and tapestries have been torn down, the walls painted, and the ceiling kalsomined. The floors have been relaid with hardwood. The couch for the nurse in the corner of the room is a simple enameled hospital bedstead similar to the crib. If it were not for the elegance and artistic nature of the decorations the chamber might be taken for a room in a private hospital.

Three doors lead from this room: one to a staircase connected with the apartments of the King and Queen above; another to a huge bathroom, with tiled walls and floor, and the third to the playroom, which, on the arrival of its occupant, will be turned into one of the finest nurseries in the world. Fifty thousand dollars are said to have been expended in making these apartments of the coming Prince or Infanta as inviting and healthful as possible.

Three days before the expected event Dr. Glendinning, who is much envied by his Spanish colleagues, but whose attendance the King, owing to wishes of his wife, insists upon, will make a formal statement to the Royal Faculty of Medicine to assemble at the palace. The head of the Faculty, after personal investigation, will send an order to the Superior Chief of the Palace, who will at once dispatch the Halberdier Guards and Court ushers to each and every person mentioned in the document printed in the Gaceta de Madrid. These persons, who are supposed to be awaiting the summons, will hasten to the palace with all possible speed, in full uniform and Court dress and with all insignia of office, and report, according to their rank, in the Camera, the Ante-Comera, the Sala, and the Saleta, and there camp out, as it were, until the event shall have taken place.

The Ceremony of Presentation.

Upon the appearance of the royal infant Dr. Glendenning will turn to King Alfonso and pronounce the following formula: "Señor, the successor to the Crown of Spain is the Prince of Asturias," or "Señor, an Infanta has been born to her Majesty, Queen Victoria Eugénie, your wife." The news is then communicated to the waiting guests, telegraphed all over Spain, and published in the Gaceta de Madrid over his Majesty's signature.

If all goes well, the Prince or Infanta will be dressed as soon as possible, placed in a little basket upon a golden salver, and given to the King. Alfonso, taking the precious burden and followed by members of the royal family, then proceeds to the Camera, and, lifting the lace veil from the baby's face, solemnly announces: "I present to you my beloved son, (or daughter,) successor to the throne of Spain, the Prince (or Infanta) of Asturias, to whom my dear spouse, her Majesty the Queen, has just given birth."

Thereupon the Minister of Grace and Justice, in his function as Notary Chief of the Realm, approaches and views the face of the child and later on issues a public avowal to that effect. The Prime Minister then takes the salver, the royal family withdraws, the guests solemnly file past, and, the ceremony being over, the child is returned to its mother amid salvos of artillery, the waving of flags, and general rejoicing throughout the Peninsula.

ARSON PLOTS AT DUBLIN.

Rumored Attempts to Burn the International Exhibition Buildings.

LONDON, April 20.—Rumors of plots to burn down the buildings of the International Exhibition, which is to open in Dublin, on May 4, are published in the afternoon papers here to-day. The plots are attributed to the advanced political sections in Ireland, which are violently opposed to the exhibition. They assert that it is unfair to Ireland to display the products of the highly developed industries of other nations in competition with native productions, which are not so highly perfected.

Inquiries at the Exposition this afternoon elicited the statement that a small fire started among some shavings in the Central Palace on April 17, but was quickly extinguished. Manager of the Exhibition said he thought it was accidental. He added:

"However, we are not taking any chances. The buildings are regularly patrolled by police and a special staff of employés has been told off to guard against fire."

WANTS ITALIANS FOR PANAMA.

But Canal Commission's Agent Finds Hostile Feeling in Rome.

ROME, April 20.—Leroy Park, agent of the Panama Canal Commission, who was sent here to study means of obtaining men for work on the Isthmus, has been informed that the Italian Government has received very grave reports regarding the hygienic, humanitarian, and moral conditions of the Italians already there, that the Government has forbidden further emigration of Italians to Panama, and that a Government official has been sent to the Isthmus to investigate.

Mr. Park did everything possible to convince the officials here that the men at work on the canal earned $2 a day, are well fed, well housed, and humanely treated.

Fire in Big Italian Shipyard.

GENOA, Italy, April 20.—Fire to-day threatened to destroy the Odero Shipyard here, one of the largest in Italy, but the firemen, assisted by 1,500 workmen, succeeded in obtaining control of the situation after damage to the amount of about $500,000 had been done. At one time the steamer Re Vittorio Emanuele of the Italian Steom Navigation Company, which is ready for launching, was threatened with destruction, as was a cruiser on the stocks near the merchant steamer, which is understood to be in course of construction for Jopan.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

MEXICO CITY, April 20.—Gen. Pedro Rincon Gallardo, Minister to Great Britian, from Mexico, has resigned. His successor has not yet been named.

MADRID, April 20.—King Alfonso to-day, in the Chapel of the Royal Palace, on behalf of the Pope, placed a Cardinal's biretta on the head of the papal Nuncio, Aristide Rinaldini, who was unable, owing to the anticipated early birth of the heir to the Spanish Crown, to be present at the recent Consistory at the Vatican, where the other new Cardinals received their hats and birettas.

BERLIN, April 20.—Baron Speck von Sternburg, the German Ambasador to the United States, who spent two days in Berlin after his arrival here from America, has gone to Northern Italy on a vacation. He will be present at the conference called Monday next of the Economic Advisory Committee for the discussion of the eGrman-American tariff.

KONAKRY, French Guinea, April 20.—A detachment of French trops recently bombarded the village of Boussedou, in Upper Guinea, which was occupied by natives of Liberia who had pillaged in French territory. The natives suffered heavily. The French force had two men killed and ten wounded.

ROME, April 20.—The Congregation of the Propaganda has been requested to give evidence in the case instituted by Bishop Bonacum of Lincoln, Neb., against Father William Murphy of Seward, Neb., but has refused to do so on the geeral principle that it will not intervene in the civil courts of America or elsewhere in differences oetween ecclesiastics.

BRITISH DESTROYER LOST.

The Ariel Sinks in Deep Water Off Valetta—Man Drowned.

VALETTA, Malta, April 20.—While manoeuvring in a night attack outside the harbor yesterday the British torpedo boat destroyer Ariel struck the breakwater and sank. One man was drowned. The Ariel lies in deep water, and it is expected that she will be a total loss.

SHIP HITS FLOATING MINE.

Japanese Waters Not Yet Clear of Dangerous War Relics.

VICTORIA, B. C., April 20.—The British steamer Fernley, from Tacoma for Taku, reached Hakodate on March 29 in a sinking condition, after striking a floating mine. The report was brought here by steamer.

Several of the Fernley's holds are full of water, considerable of her cargo of flour is damaged. The vessel will discharge and dock for repairs at Hakodate.

MANILA SWEPT BY FIRE.

Several Hundred Native Huts Destroyed—Small Earthquake Loss.

MANILA, April 20.—Fire destoryed several hundred Nipa huts in the districts of Singalong, Paco, and Bambang, in Manila, this afternoon. From 8,000 to 10,000 natives are homeless. The American settlements at Ermita and Malate escaped damage.

The flames, fanned by a heavy gale, swept on area of 100 acres clean within two hours. The damage is variously estimated at from $100,000 to $200,000 in gold. No casualties are reported.

The latest reports from Iloilo say that the fire has been checked. The business section of the city was untouched. The homeless have been housed in schools and other public buildings.

There was no loss of life by the earthquakes. The shocks, while the most severe experienced in fifteen years, were not violent enough to cause much destruction. Dispatches from points in several provinces report severe shocks, but little damage.

ZAYAS TALKS OF HARMONY.

No Split in the Liberal Party in Cuba, He Declares.

HAVANA, April 20.—Alfredo Zayas denies that there is a split in the Liberal Party, and avers that all the Liberal leaders have undertaken to accept the candidate for the Presidency chosen by the National Convention. Señor Zayas says he is satisfied that the American Government is not showing partiality to any candidate, and he declares his confidence that the Americans will fulfill their pledge of re-establishing the Republic of Cuba.

He adds that there is no necessity of burdening the new republic with additional guarantees, and expresses his confidence in the ability of the Cubans to carry on the administration of the island without recourse to force.

In reply to a question whether in the event of failure to maintain order, the Americans would return to stay, Señor Zayas said:

"In that event there would be a serious revolution in Cuba."

CANADIAN MINES CLOSED.

Coal Miners Quit Work, but Organize No Strike.

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 20.—Nearly all the coal mines in Eastern British Columbia and Alberta are closed. It was rumored yesterday that President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers of America, had instructed Vice President Sherman to ask the men to resume work, but Sherman denied this. Then S. S. Lindsey, manager of the Crows' Nest Coal Company, gave out a copy of a dispatch he had received from Mitchell, who said definitely that he had ordered Sherman to get the men back to work.

The men have not definitely gone on a strike, so they cannot be prosecuted under a new Dominion Government law. Sherman and Patterson, his assistant, both say the men are pressing them to issue a strike order.

Sherman denies that he is trying to form an independent Canadian miners' union, but under the control of the American association. He says the trend of the miners' opinions is that way, but no definite action has been taken.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has issued notices that none but perishable freight will be handled in Kootenay until the situation is relieved.

The Winnipeg Board of Trade has passed a resolution advocating the bringing in of Chinese labor to take the places of the 5,000 men who have quit work.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1:00 P. M.,

LUNCH WILL BE SERVED TO ALL PRESENT AT NOON.

This property is four miles from the New York City line and four miles south of White Plains, N. Y., the county seat of Westchester County, on the Harlem Division of the New York Central R. —IMPORTANT.—

There is a bill before the present Legislature to create a Parkway and Drive commencing at the mouth of the Bronx River and paralleling it for a distance of about twenty miles northward. Don't put it off, write to-day for full information, maps, &c.

—FREE TRANSPORTATION.—

If you are in the market for offerings that will allow a good return on the money required to purchase and where the prospect of an increase in the value of the holdings is assured I would be glad to hear from you.

will buy a Madison Av. Corner Apartment House which will return about 9 net annually on the above amount. The first mortgage has just been renewed for three years at 4½%. The second mortgage has three years to run, at 5%, making the combined average rate of interest on both mortgages under 5%. This parcel should commend itself to investors who desire to buy where there is an assurance of an increase in the value of their holding. The vicinity of this property has a very bright future and its location, together with the fact that st is a corner, makes it an attractive proposition.

$1,000,000 in Second Mortgages for Sale.

INVESTORS,

We offer for sale one of the strongest mercantile buildings in the 23d Street section, leased for long term to large and responsible concerns, with a waiting list for any vacancies that should occur. This property will be sold on the most advantageous terms. For the amount of cash required, no greater revenue can be produced. This is a great opportunity. Immediate investigation and consideration of this proposition will convince an investor that it is a good and safe investment, the ground is rapidly advancing in value, and the tenants are paying an increased rental each year, and have furnished the owners with security. Crippled Dollars

There is a moving earning POWER in EVERY DOLLAR you possess, but you can knock the pins from under them—put them where they CAN'T earn and have all your dollars CRIPPLED by investing them where there is no legitimate basis for earning power to work.

Shrewd men don't CRIPPLE their dollars, THEIRS ARE ALL ACTIVE. Such men don't need to be advised that out along ONE doubtful line of transportation you can always buy suburban lots (cabbage-patch lots we call them) cheap, and that they will ALWAYS remain cheap. In fact, these "cabbage-patch" suburban lots are the crippled dollars' home.

Transportation is the ONE and ONLY sure basis on which to buy Real Estate. If you buy where lots are dependent upon one doubtful line of transportation, you are buying one-legged lots, and, just as soon as you buy them, you have a crippled investment.

In the HEART of the BRONX, where you have SIX new lines of transportation, running out to serve a Section that has heretofore been fenced in for racing, you have this Spring A-ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY to buy where the finest transportation in the world will start right away to make you profits—to-day's prices will seem ridiculously low when these SIX lines are opened.

This is REAL, valuable city property—the kind on which conservative Banks and Trust Companies are willingly loaning money on SINGLE LOTS, as they are now doing at MORRIS PARK.

Morris Park is NOW within FORTY minutes of the Shopping District at ANY HOUR of the DAY or NIGHT, and will soon be within TWENTY-FIVE minutes of any part of Manhattan at ANY hour of the DAY or NIGHT. This is NOT a "special train" or "ONE-LEGGED" investment, but an UNUSUAL opportunity to buy REAL CITY property at GROUND FLOOR prices.

Write to-day, or call.

is your opportunity. Think of it, only 12 miles from the City Limits, and here we are offering 100 choice Building Lots, 25x100, most of them fronting on the Boulevard, for $44 each, in the finest, highest, dryest and healthiest part of Massapequa. And then pause just long enough to realize that these lots are but 35 minutes from Broadway, by way of the new Tunnels.

Ten days ago we offered 300 lots. Did they sell? Call in and see us and we will submit proof that they did, and are all gone. Then five days later we offered 150 more, and it took just two days to sell out. Now we are offering 100 more lots of this choice property at $44.

When the owner of this tract of 5,000 lots, of which we were authorized to start the introductory sale as above, starts in to run excursions to the property (and this is to be soon), these same lots we have sold will show a profit of 300 per cent.

These remaining 100 lots will not last long from the time this ad. makes its appearance, so you will have to move quick if you want one or more at $44. Map, full particulars and free ticket on application.

Westmoreland

BROADWAY-FLUSHING and WESTMORELAND are the only developments on the North Shore which have STATIONS ON THE PROPERTY. When you get off the train you don't have to walk a mile to the property—YOU ARE RIGHT ON IT.

Our 4,000 lots at Broadway-Flushing COMPLETELY SURROUND THE STATION, and our 900 lots at Westmoreland IMMEDIATELY ADJOIN the station there. Douglas Manor, with its 2,500 lots, lies BETWEEN TWO STATIONS, each of which is only two blocks distant.

When you look at property WALK FROM THE STATION and see how far it really is, and remember if you live on the property you will have to take that walk nearly EVERY DAY OF YOUR LIFE.

ALSO REMEMBER that it costs you just as much to build a house a mile from the station as it does close to it, so that all you save is perhaps a little on the first cost of the lots.

You can now buy lots in BROADWAY-FLUSHING, DOUGLAS MANOR and WESTMORELAND for from $400 to $800 per lot, and if you want to build we will loan you the full cost of the house on ten years' time.

WE HAVE ALREADY EXPENDED over $300,000 on street improvements in Broadway-Flushing, Douglas Manor and Westmoreland, and we will spend as much more this year.

If you buy anywhere without seeing these properties you will make the GREATEST MISTAKE OF YOUR LIFE.

Yankees in Batting Rally Defeat Boston by Score of 8 to 1.

The Yankees scored an easy victory yesterday over Boston at the American League Park by the score of 8 to 1. Up to the ninth inning there was every indication that New York would administer a shut-out to their opponents, but the latter took a temporary brace and averted the threatened disgrace. The Yankees held the upper hand throughout the game. They scored two runs in the first inning and thereafter were never headed. In a great batting raly in the seventh inning the locals scored five runs and put at rest any fears as to the ultimate outcome of the contest. In this inning Hoffman scored a home run, which netted three of the five tallies.

The cold weather affected the players, Boston, in particular suffering in this respect, but the weather did not chill the enthusiasm of nearly 10,000 spectatora, who defied the pneumonia-breeding atmosphere, and cheered their favorites to the end. Orth was in the box for New York and allowed Boston six hits, all of which he kept scattered, while Dineen was hit freely by the Yankee batters.

Hoffman secured three of the eleven hits made by New York. In the second inning he secured a base on balls, went to second on Keeler's sacrifice, and scored on Elberfeld's three-base hit. The latter crossed the plate on Chase's single. Laporte singled in the fourth inning, reached third on Conroy's long single to left field, and tallied on Wagner's wild throw to first.

In the fifth inning Thomas was safe on Unglab's muff of Wagner's throw, Orth singled over second, Hoffman's home run scored Thomas and Orth, Collins fumbled Keeler's grounder, Elberfeld hit to left field for two bases, Chase was thrown out at first, but Keeler crossed the plate, Wagner muffed Laporte's fly, and Elberfeld added the fifth run. Boston's run was scored in the ninth inning, when Laporte fumbled Parent's fly. Ferris hit for two bases, scoring Parent. Score:

Giants Win Second Game from Boston, 13 to 2—Seymour's Batting Record.

BOSTON, Mass., April 20.—Heavy batting by the Giants to-day gave them the victory over Boston by the score of 13 to 2. Seymour, the Giants' outfielder, distinguished himself by making a home run, two three-base hits, and two singles out of six times at bat. Three pitchers were used by Boston, and the visitors had no trouble in batting any of them, while McGinnity was effective throughout the game, allowing his opponents but six hits. "Cy" Young was knocked out of the box in the third inning, and Pfeiffer, who took his place, was just as easy for the Giants.

The cold weather had a tendency to keep down the attendance and affected the fielding of the players, who under the adverse weather conditions did very well. While Seymour's brilliant batting overshadowed the stickwork of his team mates, the work of Shannon and Devlin in this department was excellent. The former made one double and two singles, while Devlin was credited with three singles.

The Giants started the game with four runs. Boston scored two in the second inning, but was unable to add to their score after this, as McGinnity was invincible and held the team down to three hits during the remaining seven innings. New York tallied one run in the third and added seven more in the two following innings. The thirteenth and last run was scored in the eighth inning. Score:

C. C. N. Y. Lost to Lehigh.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, April 20.—Lehigh won her third straight game to-day by defeating the College of the City of New York, 6 to 3. Lehigh scored four runs in the first innings, the visitors evidently having stage fright. Lehigh had a weak spell in the third, when the New Yorkers scored twice. For the most part the game was well played. Tressler pitched a steady game for Lehigh, allowing but three hits. He had twelve strike outs. Zelfass's and Updegraff's two-baggers were features. For New York Scoppa made a sensational catch of a line drive in right field. The score by innings:

Georgetown Lands First of Series.

Georgetown defeated Fordham yesterday at Fordham Field by the score of 4 to 2. This was the first of a series of three between the teams, and both were fighting hard for the first victory. The home boys were better at batting than the Washington lads, but poor coaching on the bases prevented the Bronxonians from piling up their score. Mahoney pitched a good game for Fordham and was responsible for the two runs that were tallied. In the first he landed squarely on the ball for the circuit of the bases. Score by innings:

COLUMBIA DOWNED BY PENNSYLVANIA

New Yorkers Unable to Score in Game with the Quakers.

LEE HIT FOUR BATSMEN

Simpson's Pitching Was Puzzling to the Blue and White Players—Score 2 to 0.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20.—Pennsylvania triumphed over Columbia in the first important game of the season on Franklin Field to-day, the score ending 2 to 0.

The contest was a battle of pitchers, in which Simpson had the better of Lee. The latter pitched a good game, and, although not as effective as the Red and Blue man, he held the Quaker batsmen safely, and but for errors at critical stages the runs would not have scored.

The principal wildness displayed by both pitchers was in hitting batsmen, Lee sending four men to first in this manner, while Simpson hit two men and gave two bases on balls. Aside from this both men showed good form, using speed and curves with good effect, and with men on bases did their best work.

Simpson allowed four hits, two of them being two-baggers, while five were made by the Quakers, and three of these were infield hits. Simpson worked a cross-fire and a change, which was extremely puzzling to the White and Blue batsmen, nine of the visitors being retired on strikes.

It was uncomfortable in the stands, but a crowd of 2,000 witnessed the game, and the good work of both teams was appreciated, the Pennsylvania team coming in for the principal share, and Simpson being cheered repeatedly for his pitching. The score:

Benefits of the League's Effort to Propagate Athletics Evident in Both Branches of the National Service and Guard.

THE Military Athletic League has completed the tenth year of its existence and has, I think, amply justified its organization in that time. From its inception it has been self-supporting and has contributed considerably more than forty thousand dollars for athletic purposes to various organizations both in the two branches of National service and in the National Guard. It is today in a flourishing condition with an unbroken record of successes behind it and the promise of a continued activity and usefulness. There is every reason for those who have been instrumental in its organization and development to be proud of the record that it has made, of the helpful work that it has done.

Conceived in a spirit of philanthropy, it has developed with a patriotic purpose. Its inception came with a private movement to provide for any members of the National Guard who might be ill or become permanently incapacitated. Many of the most prominent men and women of New York City joined in the charitable undertaking to provide and endow beds in the Homeopathic Hospital for the use of the National Guardsmen, and there was held in Madison Square Garden to raise the necessary funds a big military tournament. The success that attended the undertaking was so marked that the idea occurred to the Guardsmen who were active in the management of the first carnival to perpetuate the organization. Out of this grew that annual carnivals of sports that have since been held, all of them yielding a profit which has been consistently employed to foster the athletic interests of the military body.

Aid to the National Service.

Nor was the benefit confined to the National Guardsmen, but wae spread broadcast throughout both services, that the National Army and Navy might enjoy the benefits of organized sport, which was prohibited them by the lack of resources. If the story of all that has been done by the Military Athletic League to alleviate the drudgery of the soldier's and sailor's life in the Government service were to be told by the beneficiaries, I am sure I can say without vanity that it would ring with eulogies of the Military Athletic League.

Not that the League means to vaunt itself upon this work. It was undertaken in a spirit of patriotism, in the belief that those who were giving their lives to the Nation's service should be afforded the enjoyment of athletic sports, and should improve themselves physically for the better discharge of their duties at other than their own expense. The National Government, though it provided in its orders for athletics and athletic tournaments, made no provision for the expense entailed. The officers in the service had been compelled to contribute from their meagre pay for the prizes which have been offered as incentives to the enlisted men. The Military Athletic League undertook to afford money to the various detachments in the field for such purposes wherever it could do so, and as a result of this effort the National Government has taken up the matter and now provides in part for athletics.

The Military Athletic League has given to the various forts from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast equipments for baseball, boxing, or athletic games. It has presented to battleships and other naval vessels leaving New York boxing and gymnastic paraphernalia. It has donated to transports going to the Philippines and other foreign service, baseball outfits and football material, and has generally endeavored to help out the regular Army and Navy men to afford themselves with beneficial outdoor exercises. Any one familiar with the military and naval life knows how colorless it is at times and to what extremes the men are occasionally driven to escape its tedium. The improvement in the morale of the service due to the introduction of organized athletics has been marked naturally—the improvement that would be evident in any body of men who are given something to occupy mind and body where both have previously been provided with naught but tedious routine.

Aroused Widespread Interest.

But this patriotic work in the National service has been incidental to the League. Its immediate purpose has been to improve the National Guard, in which it is organized directly. It has done this along many lines. Setting up drills do not build up the physique when practiced once a week and ignored during the remainder of the seven days. But regular athletics, undertaken not as a task, but as a pastime, does. We have been able to interest a large body of men who hitherto have had no athletic interests as active participants in sport to take up some branch of athletic work. These men have taken hold of athletics spurred more by the incentive of company or regimental pride than by the opportunity of prize winning, and some of them have developed themselves physically until to-day they can hold their own with the best athletes in the country. These men have run in our armories and made use of our gymnastic and other apparatus regularly, and to-day are immensely improved in health as a result. The whole soldier body has been in a measure engaged in competitive contests.

Brought Many Into the Guard.

Athletics, too, have been helpful to the organization of the Guard as a strong recruiting influence. They have brought active, energetic young men into the service who otherwise would never have thought of enlisting. They have proved attractive from a spectacular as well as an athletic standpoint and have attracted attention to the Guard it otherwise would not have got. Men have joined the lists who have first heard of the regimental service through athletic contests. So it has been beneficial to the State in its way.

All these things have grown from that little philanthropic impulse in the interest of the ill and infirmed. It has truly been a case with us of casting our bread upon the waters to have it return after many days.

There has been a disposition on the part of some of those who have been interested in athletic clubs to regard the regimental athletic organizations as rivals who absorb some of the vital strength of athletics that would otherwise have been theirs. Rather than antagonistic to organized athletics in the clubs, the Military Athletic League has been helpful to them. It has offered the club athlete opportunities for more widespread competition than he ever enjoyed before the regiments took up athletics. It has offered its armories for practice and for games time and again to athletic clubs. It has encouraged and fostered schoolboy athletics and has felt the warmest interest in the very beneficial work that is being carried on so effectively by the Public Schools Athletic League in this city.

If I were asked what organizations in the country had done the most for athletics, and through athletics had been most helpful to the body politic, I should say without hesitation they were the Amateur Athletic Union of America, the Public Schools Athletic League, and the Military Athletic League, and that the three should stand hand in hand at the forefront of beneficial influences for the development of a healthy body and a healthy mind, conserving public morals and generally benefiting city, State, and Nation.

I wish all the citizens of New York who have looked upon the work of the League as the expression of physical exuberance in the military body, a pastime organized purely for pleasure and of no real, strong, material consequence, could come for a short time into the same close touch with the organization that I have enjoyed. I am sure that they would look upon it in a very different light in future.

Advance Made by Guardsmen Since Introduction of Athletic Games Has Been Conspicuous. High Average of Ability Obtains.

By Major W. A. Turpin.

IDENTIFIED with the Military Athletic League from the start, I am naturally rather disposed to look upon it with fond eyes that perhaps exaggerate its merits, yet, looking back over its record in the last ten years, it seems to me to be highly creditable and that I may be pardoned the pride I take in it. It has certainly been of great benefit to the National Guard in New York since its installation, and to the regular service as well. Its work in stimulating athletics in both army and navy has been extremely helpful, as the expressions of active officers in regular service attest.

It has not been the endeavor of the league to develop champions, but to improve the general physique of the whole soldier body by the encouragement of health-giving sport. That we have developed a few champions who take rank in the forefront of the Nation's athletes is, however, a source of pride to all of us. I do not believe that there is any aggregation in the United States that can turn out better all-around track athletes, and I am satisfied if the pick of athletes of the Military League were to be got together they could hold their own against the best athletic clubs.

Attracts High-Class Men.

The roster of well-known names is a notable one and it is growing steadily, for one result of the military athletic movement has been to attract into the service men who give promise of developing athletic skill, who seek the benefits of the frequent contests and the excellent training facilities which they have in the armories, as well as the advice of the seasoned men we now have running for the various regiments. Naturally some of the regiments have been more conspicuous than others in athletic achievement, but the others are progressing with rapid strides, and instead of a half dozen notable for their athletic ability, there will be seen a dozen that will make good showings in the competitions.

And the class of men that has been attracted into the regiments by athletics is of an especially high grade that is highly beneficial to the service, while for the men themselves, the taste of military discipline is helpful. The games have added to the social pleasures of the regimental life and have been the means of bringing the service to the notice of desirable recruits who otherwise would not have been attracted to the Guard. In the experience of the Guard I am quite sure we have never had a better class of young men enrolled than we have to-day.

In the recent tournament of the league held a fortnight ago the Thirteenth Regiment was enabled to carry off the championship, but I can say that the victory which was due to the consistent training of the athletes in the regiment was only won after hard competition in which the Thirteenth team men were mighty hard pressed. Only the presence of such unusual athletes as Harry Hillman, Lawson Robertson, and Harvey Cohn was responsible for the ultimate success of the team.

Fine Line of Sprinters.

Hillman is distinctly a product of the Military Athletic League. It was in the armories that he got his first inclination toward athletics, and it has been in the armories that he has done most of his training. Hillman to-day is, I think, the peer of any other runner in the country, and his victories in every track event from 100 yards to 1,000 yards have been cleanly won with records that have ranked him high in the annals of American athletics. His hurdling entitles him to a foremost place as well, and had it not been for the accident that befell him on shipboard when en route to Athens I am satisfied that he would have made as creditable a showing in the Olympic games as Martin Sheridan himself.

Melvin Sheppard is another great runner who stands at the very pinnacle of American middle distance men. Sheppard's versatility, too, is proved by the remarkable list of victories at a variety of distances that he has won. Lawson Robertson deserves to rank very high among the sprinters in America, and I regard both Harvey Cohn and Billy Frank among the best of the long-distance men. I mention these men because they happen to occur first to my mind. There are others in the lists as notable.

Teevan, Clark, Hall, Crockett, Robertson, Toole, Waters, Miller, Langan, Nortbridge, and Eller are a lot of sprinters who would be hard to match in any ranks, while Squires, Hillman, Bacon, Sedley, Valentine, Van Thun, Rogers, Odell, and Farrell are among the very best of the middle-distance runners. Sullivan, Sheppard, Frank, Cohn, Spring, Freeman, Odell, and Rogers include almost all the best long-distance men in New York, while several of these men are good in the field events.

I mention these men simply to indicate the character of the athletes in the ranks. It is with the general body of men that the officers of the regiments are principally concerned and with these the improvement due to the added interest in athletics has been marked and most satisfactory. The inter-company games that have been held in the various regiments have stimulated a rivalry that has brought out a great number of competitors, and the training that these men have done has benefited them materially. They have had the additional incentive of many handicap and novice contests, which have given them the opportunity to meet the stars on something like an equality, and by the frequency of these meetings to get encouragement to continue their work.

Success in competition is, of course, not the end of athletics, but it is necessary to maintain interest.

I really regard this introduction of athletics into the regular service the greatest work that the Military Athletic League has done, and that it was inspired by an unselfish spirit through a patriotic impulse is, I think, worthy of the highest praise.

Records of the League Compare Favorably with Those of the Best Athletic Clubs, Considering Conditions of Competition. Sheppard, Hillman, and Robertson Establish Marks That Are Highly Creditable – Good Performances of Other Stars.

By Lieut. Charles J. Dieges.

IN a long experience in track athletics I think I may say that for all around high class performers the Military Athletic League can rank with any organization of its size in the world. An examination of its records does not show the excellence of the performances. It must be borne in mind in comparing the records with those that are the standards for the various events that the military records are all made indoors on board floors in armories where often the track is of small circumference. Nor even in the larger armories can the conditions be compared to those in Madison Square Garden, where most of the indoor running records are made.

Reviewing the list of prominent runners in New York, there is scarcely one of note, with the exception of George Bonhag, who is not enrolled in the Military League. The field athletes have not joined the league because there is almost no opportunity for the field athlete to compete. The Military League has not included any field events in its championships with the exception of the shot put, and this event is held infrequently for the reason that it damages the armory floors. Having no incentive to competition, there is nothing that especially attracts the athlete of the Sheridan and Flanagan type, such as attracts the runners.

Great Benefit of Indoor Meets.

Every follower of athletics knows that were it not for indoor competition in the Winter months, it would not be possible for New York athletes to accomplish half what they have accomplished in developing American athletics to their present high plane. The regimental organizations are responsible for the great majority of the indoor meets that are annually held. Some of the best competitions that have been held in New York have been held under their auspices. These contests have been close and interesting, and the rivalry has stimulated many in their training.

Sheppard's record half mile in 1:58 was made in regimental games. In the recent championship he came very close to equaling that figure when he established the League record of 1:58 4-5. Lawson Robertson's two records in the 100 and 220 yard dash are mighty fast; 10 2-5 seconds for the hundred indoors is going a bit and his 23 3-5 seconds for the 220 yards almost as good, considering the short turn in the track. Hillman's 220-yard hurdle record of 26 seconds is just as good, and his 440 yards in 52 seconds a record few sprinters can equal under similar conditions. So is J. P. Sullivan's mile in 4:30 3-5, as well as the relay record of the Thirteenth Regiment. That record was made with one man running his relay without a shoe. The other records of the League are all those made in events that are difficult of comparison, such as the three-legged race, the sack race, and the wall scaling, but they are all excellent.

Average of Ability is High.

And these marks that have been made by the present record holders have all been closely approached by other men in the same events, showing that the general excellence of the athletic material is exceptional. The aggregation of skill and speed in the Thirteenth Regiment alone—the team that won the championship of the League in the recent meeting—would creditably represent any college or athletic club in a National championship and come mighty close to carrying off first honors.

The Twenty-second Regiment has some awfully good men representing it, and so have the Twenty-third and the Seventy-first. The Twelfth has a strong array, and the Eighth is coming up. The Fourth Regiment of New Jersey has a half dozen good men, and it is only a question of time when these other regiments, with the encouragement they are giving to athletics, will even things up more with the Thirteenth. None of these regiments that have taken up track athletics would think of abandoning them or discouraging competition.

NOTASULGA WINS IN RECORD TIME

Winter Track Filly Beats Frizette and Master Robert for the Canarsie.

W.H. CAREY TAKES HANDICAP

The largest and best class fields of the New York Spring racing season made up the card for the first Saturday half holiday at the Aqueduct track yesterday, and with the aid of the most cheerful weather of the week, induced an attendance that was only a little behind the best records of the course, about 12,000 visitors being on hand when the chief events of the day were decided. These features numbered three, all stakes, with popular interest centring in the Canarsie, at half a mile, for two-year-olds, in which the crack filly from New Orleans, Notasulga, was called on to meet the two smartest winners of the Aqueduct season, Samuel Emery's Master Robert and James R. Keene's Frizette, in a field of eight runners.

The New Orleans filly was the first to break, and benefited by the fact that Frizette on the rail moved off rather slowly, Notasulga thus having the chance to swing over to the rail, while Frizette, shut out by the move, had to go around the field, and, rushing through the field to make up the lost ground on the bend in the chute, there went wide, crossing over in front of Master Robert at the same time, while Notasulga, with plain sailing before her and a straight run on the rail, went on the shortest way to the winning post. Frizette had speed enough to carry her to the front at that, and the contest took on the nature of a finish before the field had passed the last quarter pole. The riders of the leaders there had their whips out, and in the next sixteenth of a mile were hard at work with them. Frizette and Notasulga, under punishment, coming away from the others steadily and fighting out a bitter struggle for the advantage of the lead, which, in spite of her swerving, Frizette held for nearly the full half mile after she once showed in front. Master Robert was in third place through most of the distance, but the fillies, racing lapped in front, shut him off on the rail, and when his rider finally did pull out and attempt to go around them Master Robert was too late, even had he possessed speed enough to race with the fillies. Whipped for more than a furlong, both fillies were tiring at the end, but Frizette tired fastest, and Notasulga showed in front in the last few strides, and snatched the hardest-won victory of her career by a short head, Frizette finishing three lengths in front of Master Robert, third, in 0:47, equalling the record for the stake and the time record for the meeting.

The second feature of the day, the Queens County Handicap, was a fair renewal of the Carter Handicap, in that the Carter Handicap winner, Glorifier, and several other horses that were contenders in the earlier race, were among the eight starters. W. H. Carey won the race by five lengths in 1:40, the fastest mile of the meeting. Preston was so far in front of Good Luck when the winner made his move, that tired as he was, he lasted long enough to get second place, with Oxford and the Carter Handicap winner back in the unplaced division. THREE JOCKEYS INJURED.

Jockeys met with falls in three separate races yesterday at the Aqueduct track of the Queens County Jockey Club, and in two instances received injuries which will put them in retirement for some time. The most unfortunate of the three was Charles Brady, an apprentice rider employed by Timothy D. Sullivan, and under the care of George T. Miller, trainer of some of the Sullivan horses. Brady rode the three-year-old Cooney K. in the sixth race. Cooney K. was knocked off his feet and tumbled Brady over his head. The boy was removed to St. Mary's Hospital, in Jamaica, with a broken arm, a broken jaw, and a wound at the back of his head, caused by a blow from a horse's foot. It was said at the hospital last night that the jockey was in no danger.

David Englander, one of the most promising of the young lightweight jockeys, was another sufferer. Englander meeting with his mishap in the running of the fifth race, in which he rode R. T. Griffin's two-year-old filly Evelyn G. The horse fell with such force that she lay stunned for several minutes. Englander was up and on his feet instantly, but when brought back to the jockey's quarters in the patrol judge's buggy it was found that he had sustained a slight fracture of the shoulder blade. The boy went home with his friends on the horse train to Sheepshead Bay. The horse was taken away in the horse ambulance and may be saved.

The third sufferer was the steeplechase jockey Finnegan, who rode Drone in the jumping race. Finegan escaped other injury than bruises.

Mr. Soley served notice of appeal on the County Clerk of Westchester County and Welton C. Percy, counsel for the State Racing Commission last Wednesday, and yesterday advised Mr. Percy that the appeal had been placed on the calendar for one week from to-morrow.

Germany May Buy Senorita Stud.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 20.—It was learned to-night that Dr. Arnold Frank of Berlin, Emperor William's personal representative, who was sent to Kentucky to buy 1,000 thoroughbreds for the use of German officers, is negotiating with Capt. Harry Brown of Pittsburg for the purchase of the Senorita Stud, this county, formerly owned by the late Capt. S. S. Brown of Pittsburg. If the purchase is made it is likely that Dr. Frank will establish a breeding plant here to raise heavier class horses, as he could only buy eight in Kentucky heavy enough for use in Germany.

R. C. Vanderbilt's Weeding-Out Sale.

Reginald C. Vanderbilt has decided that his stable of show horses is in need of a shaking up. On his return from England next month he will dispose of twenty or thirty horses and ponies not quite good enough to win at the shows in which he exhibits, and will replace them with better stock. He is expected to send over several good carriage horses from England to be pointed for the Fall open-air shows as a preliminary for the National Association exhibition at Madison Square Garden. The weeding-out sale will be held at the American Horse Exchange on May 16, under the management of Francis M. Ware.

LONDON, April 20.—Fully 100,000 enthusiastic admirers of football to-day witnessed the final game in the English Cup ties at the Crystal Palace between Everton, the holders of the trophy, and Sheffield. All the seating capacity at the ground was sold a week ahead. Sheffield won the match.

TENNIS SURPRISES IN INDOOR TOURNEY

LARNED AND WRENN WIN

Leonard and Pell Beaten in Three-Set Contest—International Team Is Not Yet Chosen.

Hard-fought matches in the lawn tennis doubles resulted in Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr., and the team composed of William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., winning their competitions yesterday on the court of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. In the former match Little and Behr defeated Beals C. Wright and Irving C. Wright, after two deuce sets at 8—6 and 8—6. Larned and Wrenn won their match after losing the opening set to Edgar W. Leonard and Theodore Roosevelt Pell. The final score was 4—6, 7—5, and 6—1.

In the first set Beals Wright managed to bring the games to deuce at 5-all on his service. He took this game by a love score. Behr came back with a winning service, closely followed by Irving Wright. This was the last stand of the Wrights in this set, for on Beals Wright's service Little and Behr took the set at 8—6.

Beals Wright was even more erratic in the second set. The rallies were often prolonged in this portion of the game and the lobbing remarkably effective on both sides. It was in their handling of the lobs that Little and Behr displayed their weakness. Both were uncertain overhead, smashing the ball into the net. Behr's passing drives pulled out many of the games so that the set ended as had the first, at 8—6.

Leonard and Pell outplayed their opponents at the net in spectacular style in the first set of their match. Then Larned and Wrenn settled down to their game. They made use of the side alleys for passes, and on this Larned displayed his skill, as the majority of the aces came from his racquet. Once Leonard and Pell were within two points of the match, but the ex-champion and Wrenn held them off, and finally won easily, as the other pair tired from their fast play close to the net. The summary:

Men's Round Robin Doubles.—First Round—Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr., defeated Beals C. Wright and Irving C. Wright, 8—6, 8—6; William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., defeated Edgar W. Leonard and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, 4—6, 7—5, 6—1.

Lawn tennis players were set to wondering yesterday where the American international team stood. From the statement of one of the committee in charge of the challenging team no players have been decided upon. The committeeman declared that Beals C. Wright and Karl H. Behr, Jr., were only to be regarded as possibilities, while Raymond D. Little had been no more than a secondary consideration.

The vague and unsatisfactory statements coming from the committee plainly puzzled Wright, but he refrained from any comment, said that he had been unable to see Dr. James Dwight, Chairman of the International Committee, while in Boston last week. The other members of the committee are Robert D. Wrenn and William J. Clothier. Wright said that the only thing that he could say was that D. P. Rhodes would not be a member of the team.

DOHERTYS MAY NOT PLAY.

English Tennis Champions Not Likely to Compete for Davis Cup.

LONDON, April 20.—In the final of the singles in the covered court championship games to-day A. F. Wilding of New Zealand beat G. A. Garlda, 3—0. As H. L. Doherty will not defend the title, having decided to retire for at least a year from first-class competitions, Wilding becomes champion. This is the first time the title has left Great Britain since the estaublishment of the tournament.

Although the question has not yet been definitely decided, it is doubtful whether either of the Dohertys will compete for the Davis Cup this year.

Outdoor Lawn Tennis Begins.

Lawn tennis clubs in the metropolitan district opened their outdoor season yesterday. All reports from the trout fishing localities are of a promising character. Despite the recent spell of cold weather many good catches have been reported, and with a moderation in the weather the fishing will improve.

The following catches of cod and blackfish were made on the steamer Angler off Farm Banks last Friday: H. Reinhardt, 2 cod, 12 blackfish; L. Grininger, 4 cod, 9 blackfish; C. Schacht, 2 cod, 6 blackfish; P. Suda, 1 cod, 8 blackfish; C. Krumide, 1 cod, 18 blackfish; D. Hinds, 6 blackfish; S. Lang, 2 cod, 17 blackfish; T. Lyons, 1 cod, 15 blackfish; C. Trout fishing opened auspiciously in Pennsylvania last week. The favorite bait at present is plump white sawyers, or tempting earth worms. Fly fishing will be at its best during the months of June and July.

The first fishing trip of the Bell Ringers' Fishing Club took place from Frank White's Wreck Lead, L. I. The officers for the year are: Thomas J. Gregg, captain; James E. McCoy, pilot; Phil Nutter, steward.

The American Anglers have secured the following dates on the auxiliary yacht Daphne: April 28, May 26, June 23, July 21, Aug. 25, Sept. 15, and Nov. 17. The officers include Fred Neckel, captain; J. Kracke, first mate; H. Kornderfer, treasurer, and A. Fallon, secretary.

Fishermen in Connecticut are advocating a change for trout fishing. It is proposed to have the season begin April 15, instead of April 1, owing to poor condition of the fish during the early part of the month.

The passengers on the steamer Angler enjoyed a good day's fishing yesterday at Farms Banks. The number of cod caught was 283, the largest weighing 26 pounds. Fishermen hooked 1,683 blackfish and a number of whiting, cunners and ling.

The South Brooklyn Fishing Club has chartered the motor sloop Three Sisters for May 5, 19, June 2, 16, 30, July 14, 28, Aug. 11, 25, Sept. 8, 22, Oct. 13, 27, and Nov. 10.

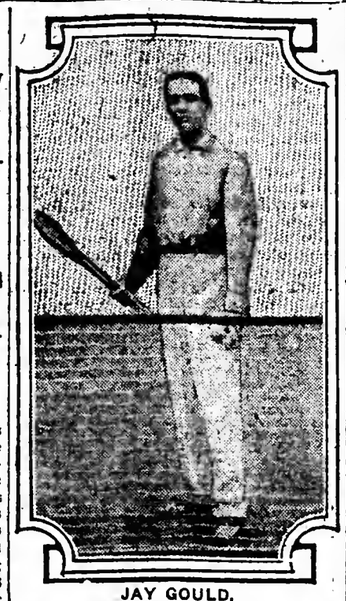
Members of the Neptune Fishing Club made their first trip of the season last week, and the result of six hours' fishing was 450 flounders.

The Mohican Fishing Club, which had chartered the motor yacht Tartar, has limited the number of passengers to twenty-five. The first trip will be on April 28 from the clubhouse on the Vernam dock at Hammel's Station, Jamaica Bay.

The Long Island brook trout season opened on March 30. It closes on the evening of Aug. 30. The open seasons in other counties are: Monroe and Livingston, March 29 to Aug. 31; Schoharie, except the Schoharie River, May 1 to July 31; Cayuga, April 16 to July 15; Orange, April 1 to Aug. 31; Wyoming, April 16 to July 15; Saratoga, Rensselaer, Warren, and Washington, May 1 to Aug. 31; Alleghany County, in the Genessee River, April 16 to Aug. 31; in all other streams in Alleghany County, April 15 to July 15.

The Thomas Mac Nee Social Club of Newark will make their first deep-sea fishing trip to-day.



JAY GOULD.

Amateur Champion Court Tennis Player of America, who will compete in the International Championship Tournament in London this week.

LOOKS GOOD FOR GOULD.

American Court Tennis Champion in British Amateur Tourney.

The withdrawal of Eustace H. Mills from the international court tennis championship tournament, which opens at Queen's Club, London, on Wednesday, has resulted in making Jay Gould, the American amateur champion, a warm favorite for first honors. No American has ever succeeded in wresting the championship from the Britishers, and the prospect of an eighteen-year-old player accomplishing this is disconcerting to the English players. For the sake of international sport, it is disappointing that the man who has held the championship of England for so many years and who is acknowledged to be the best amateur in Europe should suddenly resolve to forfeit his title.

Jay Gould, who has been the principal figure of court tennis for the past two years, attained a fame and distinction that has fallen to no man's lot. From the novice stage he won in quick succession the Gold Racquet at the Tuxedo Club, and the amateur championship at the New York Racquet and Tennis Club. Within four months of his first tournament appearance he crowned his previous remarkable achievement by taking second prize in the British Amateur Championship, that is, he won every match except as challenger to E. H. Mills, who, barring one year, has held the title since 1888.

Peter Latham, one of the best professional players in the world, visited America two Winters ago. After having played against Gould, he said: "He is one of the best players of his years I have ever seen. He needs, however, to work up to the true tennis stroke, which will enable him to place the ball better. It takes time to teach a young player all he must know to be a world's champion, and a trip abroad would do much to advance Mr. Gould toward the distinction he is bound to achieve very soon."

Columbia's Lacrosse Team Beaten.

The New York Lacrosse Club defeated Columbia's team yesterday afternoon on South Field by a score of 5 points to 2. The local collegians played a fairly good game for their second this season, but were not a match for the Lacrosse Club team, made up of veteran players. The first half ended in Columbia's favor, however, with the score 2 to 1. But in the second period a pace was set which they were unable to follow, and they could not score again. The chief difficulty was with the stick work, as few of the collegians were able to hold the ball well. Line-up:

Crescent A. C. Defeats Harvard.

Harvard's lacrosse team made an excellent showing yesterday at Bay Ridge, and after an interesting contest was beaten by the Crescent Athletic Club fifteen by the close score of 7 to 5. The Crimson players kept their opponents busy throughout the contest and several times tied the score. It was not until the latter part of the game that the superior condition and experience of the Crescent A. C. men showed to advantage and determined the result of the match.

TRAVIS IS VICTOR AT GARDEN CITY

EVERY HOLE FOUGHT FOR

Splendid golf characterised the final club rounds yesterday in the Garden City Club's tournament. The battle royal for the chief trophy, which attracted a small host of local players to the links, was between the ex-National champion, Walter J. Travis, and the present metropolitan champion, Jerome D. Travers. In every respect it was as keen a match as the most critical had looked for, and not until the thirty-eighth hole had been played out did the veteran triumph over his younger opponent. The final rounds for the various cups were 36 holes. In the morning half Travers had the better of the game throughout, but only by a narrow margin, leading by one hole with a score of 81 for the course to 82 for Travis. In the afternoon the same steady, hard playing was in order, but Travis, who understands the Garden City course like a book, managed to get slightly the better of his younger rival in the accuracy of his short shots.

When the long round ended with honors even in front of the clubhouse, every golfer who was not out playing in the handicap crowded around the tee to watch the fight on the extra holes for the victory. There have been many notable matches at Garden City, and this one will take high rank among them as one of the sportiest ever played there. Both men were steady as rock in driving for the thirty-seventh hole, Travis getting a slightly longer drive, but honors were even on the green. On the short second Travis was short on his second, and a good put by Travis gave him the hole in 3 to 4 for his opponent, thus winning the match and the Garden City Cup.

The cards were:

Travis, out	5	4	3	5	4	5	5	5	3—39
Travers, in	5	3	4	5	4	5	5	5	4—40
Travis, out	5	5	3	6	5	5	5	5	3—42—81
Travers, in	4	3	4	5	5	5	5	5	3—42—82
Travis, out	5	4	3	5	4	6	5	5	4—41
Travers, in	4	4	4	6	5	5	4	4	3—39
Travis, out	5	6	4	6	4	5	4	6	3—43—84
Travers, in	5	5	4	6	5	5	5	5	3—43—82

Extra holes—Travis, 4, 3; Travers, 4, 4.

The consolation cup final between W. L. Hicks of Nassau and W. D. Vanderpool was also close, the former winning by one hole. Max Behr also had a good match for the President's Cup, beating James L. Taylor, the Dyker Meadow Captain, by 3 up and 2 to play, and C. L. Toppin of the Westbrook Club won the cup for the third sixteen by 1 up. The cup results are:

Garden City Cup.—Final Round—Walter J. Travis, Garden City, beat Jerome D. Travers, Montclair, 1 up. (38 holes.)

Beaten Eight Cup.—Final Round—James M. Rhett, Dyker Meadow, beat S. D. Bowers, Brooklawn, 9 up and 8 to play.

President's Cup.—Final Round—Max Behr, Morris County, beat James L. Taylor, Dyker Meadow, 3 up and 2 to play.

Over forty golfers competed in the handicap which was characterized by the presence of H. J. Whigham, the English golfer, who held the United States championship in 1895 and 1896. He made the good score of 87, which, less his handicap of 5, gave him a place among the leaders. Findlay Douglas, with a score of 85, 2—83, won the gross score prize, and Morgan Smith of Morris County got the net score prize in a score of 87, 7—80. J. M. Rhett was second with 87, 5—82.

Golfers Tie in Bogey Contest.

The high wind on the Dyker Meadow Golf Club links, near Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, played havoc yesterday with the scores in the bogey handicap for the cup presented by Eben B. Knowlton. Howard F. Whitney and W. B. Rhett led the field, each finishing 7 down to bogey, and they will play off later in the week for the trophy. The other leaders were: Arthur B. Clapp, 9 down; F. W. Shipley, 9 down; J. E. Way, 9 down; F. M. Hinckle, 10 down; Daniel Chauncey, 10 down; F. J. Phillips, 11 down; E. B. Miller, 12 down; D. V. B. Hegeman, 12 down; M. M Butler, 12 down; A. E. Byrd, 12 down, and Charles Adams, 15 down.

Dr. H. A. Lawton Lands 165-Pound Prize Tarpon

Dr. H. A. Lawton of Cleveland is the possessor of the prize tarpon of the season. He caught the fish at Indian Key, Fla., on March 22, with a Wilson spoon, 24-thread line, and 20-ounce rod, without gaff, which is considered an exceptional performance by expert anglers. The tarpon weighed 165 pounds, was 6 feet 5 inches in length, and 42 inches in girth. Mr. Lawton, who is stopping at the Hotel Wolcott, this city, has had the fish mounted.

"On March 12 I went aboard the yacht Gloria with a guide," said Dr. Lawton, in explaining how he landed his prize. "For ten days we had not discovered a sign of any kind of fish, and I was beginning to get discouraged. Capt. Thompson of the Gloria, a guide, and myself jumped into a launch and set out for shore to procure provisions. In my hurry I took along my rod and bait, leaving my gaff behind. I carried the rod just to have some fun in catching a few small fishes if the chance afforded.

"At 6:45 o'clock on the night of March 22, after casting my line overboard I felt a terrific jerk. Then before we were aware the boat began to move and on a little while we were carried out into the ocean about half a mile.

"I got another jerk that nearly swept me off my feet. Thompson and the guide went to my assistance and at the termination of twenty minutes we all were in a condition to give up. 'Hold on,' yelled the Captain, and in some unexplainable manner I did, although I was nearly exhausted. Now, I weigh nearly 240 pounds, the Captain weighs 180 pounds, and the guide about 160 pounds. Yet we seemed to be as weak as a limp rag in that boat. We pulled and hauled for ten minutes more and were at last rewarded by seeing the head of the tarpon appear a few inches above the surface of the waves.

"I was determined to use every effort to land the prize and gave the line another jerk, and although the resistance was terrible I got the tarpon into the air. It was a case now of drowning your fish or losing him. When the tarpon was exhausted and gasping for breath the Captain succeeded in slipping a rope through the gills of the fish and the battle was over."

THREE AUTO SHOWS FOR COMING SEASON

LATE DATE IS FAVORED

Agents Claim New Models of European Machines Will Not Be Ready for Earlier Exhibits.

Three automobile shows will be held in New York next season, the latest one to be announced having been arranged by the representatives of the foreign cars that have agencies in this country. The Importers' Salon, which consists of eight members and is affiliated with the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, has secured permission from the latter body, which holds the contract for automobile shows in Madison Square Garden, to use the Garden for the exhibit of foreign machines and options for three dates for the latter part of December and January.

The fact that both the Licensed Association and the Automobile Club of America, with which the independent manufacturers are associated, have both decided to hold earlier shows next season, the Licensed show, to open late in October, has not been entirely satisfactory to the importers, as the majority of them claim that it will be impossible to have the latest models of their cars here until later in the year.

For the last two years these factions have shown their cars with the American machines in the two rival shows, but the permission of the Licensed Association to use the Garden for a distinct importers' exhibit will eliminate all differences of licensed or unlicensed affiliations, opening the opportunity for the display of about thirty-five types of foreign machines now sold by agents in America. Most of these agents have promised to take an active part in the show and to secure models of their respective cars as early as possible, most of which will be exhibited in the big decennial show in Paris from November 12 to December 1. These cars include the Bianchi, Brasier, Britannia, C. G. V., Clement-Bayard, De Lahaye, Delaury-Belleville, Decauville, Darracq, De Dietrich, English Daimler, Fiat, Hotchkiss, Humber, Isotta-Fraschini, Italia, La Buire, Leon Bullee, Martini, Mercedes, Mors, Panhard, Pilain, Renault, Rolls-Royce, Rossel, Rochet-Scneider, Westinghouse, Weigel, and Zust.

C. R. Mabley and E. H. Hollander of the Importers' Salon have been appointed as a committee to meet a committee from the other importers and arrange details for the exhibit.

The ultimate effect of this new importers' show may be that no foreign cars will be exhibited in either the Licensed show in Madison Square Garden, or in the Independents' show in the Grand Central Palace. This will probably cause some opposition among the independents as a number of foreign car representatives are members of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association. The show outlook, therefore, for the coming season promises to be an unusually active one, with ample opportunities for all makes of American and foreign machines to be seen in New York.

NOTES OF INTEREST TO AUTOMOBILISTS.

Over twenty cars have been received for the third sale next Tuesday of the Automobile Auction Company of America at the new salesrooms, 41 West Sixty-third Street. At the second sale last week fifteen cars were disposed of, and very fair prices were obtained. A 12-horse power 1905 Darrarq brought $2,250. A 50-horse power 1905 Apperson, $2,100; a 20-horse power 1903 Aerocar, $1,250; a 70-horse Pahhard of the 1904 model, $1,700. The cheapest car was a 1904 electric brougham, which went for $80.

Henry A. Mauer was the first purchaser of an aerocar from A. M. Robbins when the latter assumed the management of the Aerocar salesrooms last Spring at Broadway and Seventy-third street. Mr. Mauer has driven his car extensively and he was so well pleased with its water-cooled features that he has just purchased one of the new 1907 models.

E. Lamberjack & Co. of this city, agents for the Michelin tires, has received a letter from J. H. Walker of Walkerville, Ont., who stated that his car was equipped with Michelin tires last summer. "One of the four tires," he says, "has run 5,140 miles, and the other three varied from 4,250 to 4,675 miles, and are still in good condition."

The Corbin Motor Vehicle concern will move into larger quarters on May 1, having secured a frontage of forty feet in the big automobile building at 1886 Broadway, between Sixty-second and Sixty-third Streets.

James K. Christie, who recently withdrew from the firm of Palmer & Christie, importers, has joined the American Locomotive Automobile Company as city sales manager. He has been connected with the automobile business from 1900, and believes the Berliet car has a great future in America. It is built in this country of imported materials, and is modeled exactly after the foreign product.

In response to a general demand the St. Louis Car Company, manufacturers of the American Mors, are now taking orders for a 14-18 horsepower landaulet for town use, with a specially designed body. Manager Hopkins of the New York branch expects the first shipment of these cars this week. The car is built along the general lines of the small motor cabs that are used extensively abroad.

Leo Melanowski, a well-known French engineer and designer of automobiles, is now acting as the chief engineer of the Aerocar Company in its Detroit factory. He has been working for some time upon the new 1908 model, which will be finished early in the Fall.

It is novel to hear of the Secretary of the American Automobile Association making repeated trips, gathering in the sheep. Every time he goes out a few more State associations are tacked on to the national body, and the indications are that the A. A. A. will within the year be the largest automobile body in the world.

In advocating that the Glidden tour contestants start out with the bonnets of their cars sealed down, an interesting statement is made by James Joyce, General Manager of the American Locomotive Automobile Company, which makes the Berliet car. He says that he does not consider anything an angine which cannot run fifty or sixty thousand miles without giving any trouble. This is certainly a high standard.

The methods prevailing in the automobile manufacturing and selling business are gradually rising to a certain high standard. This crystallization is already noticeable in connection with the methods of a number of prominent concerns and before long will be general.

C. H. Martin of Martin & Co., consulting engineers, spent a portion of last week in Buffalo, where he is organizing a motor stage line between Lake Pleasant and Northville, N. Y. His company has designed a sixteen-passenger car, particularly adapted to the roads in that vicinity, which are none too good, and are extremely hilly, necessitating a specially constructed car.

The rapidity with which the Aerocar Company has grown has necessitated the placing of another large order for machinery. A contract was recently made stipulating that the equipment be furnished at the earliest possible date. The plans were to have this machinery ready to produce the 1908 cars, but the increasing demand of this season has made it necessary to use the new machinery at once.

Hubbard of Amherst Eligible to Run.

The New England Intercollegiate Athletic Association has decided that John Hubbard, the crack Amherst hurdler, is eligible to run in the intercollegiate championships this Spring. It has been considered that he was ineligible on account of the fact that he had been appointed and had accepted the position of football coach at Amherst for next season, which is a salaried position, and which will professionalize him. The New England Association, however, held that inasmuch as no contract had been signed by Hubbard he was still an amateur, and would remain so until he either signed a contract or assumed his football duties.

Four New "Q" Boats Overboard.

Of the boats being built for the King's Cup contest at Jamestown in the twenty-two-foot class, four were launched during the last week and will be ready for trial trips within the next fortnight. Two of them were the Herreshoff boats for Francis B. Fabyan and for Burgess & Gay. A third was the boat for Lawrence F. Percival, building by Burgess & Packard at Marblehead, and the other was the C. F. Tillinghast boat design by George Owen, and building at the Hodgdon yards at East Boothbay, Me. Work is also progressing rapidly on the Crowninshield boat which was begun only two weeks ago.

OUTLOOK FOR DOG SHOWS.

Owners Anticipate Events of Spring Circuit to Open at Buffalo.

With the Buffalo dog show to be held this week the spring circuit which began at Pittsburg will end. Dog owners, however, have to deal in futures to a great extent, and are already on the anxious seat regarding the bunch of shows to take place at the end of May.

Mr. Mortimer's absence almost continuously from the time he went to judge at Boston in Washington's Birthday week until the close of the Erie show last night, has possibly held back the arrangements for the Ladies' Kennel Association, but there is more than ample time ahead for all announcements yet to be made. The definite statement has been forthcoming as to location, which will once more be at Mineola Fair Grounds, the efforts to get a suitable place in New York City having failed. Prospective judges have been communicated with, and they may be announced at any time now.

For the Brighton Beach show the slate is all but complete, and will be made public this week. Exhibitors of Irish terriers will be interested in knowing that Mr. John Cadoo of Brooklyn will judge the breed at the Brighton Beach show, while Mr. John G. Bates of Cedarhurst is to officiate at the Wissahickon show.

CYCLISTS AT WAR TO GET CONTROL

N. C. A. HAS THE UPPER HAND

Rival cycling organizations promise a lively tussle for the control of road and track racing in the season just beginning. On the one side is the old National Cycling Association, which virtually took the place of the League of American Wheelmen, and on the other the National Federation of Amateur Cyclists. The latter sprang into being only last week at a meeting held in the clubhouse of the Brower Wheelmen, 98 Greenwich Avenue.

The opposition to the long-established organization is the outcome of a movement of the latter to assume supervision of road meetings. According to Chairman R. F. Kelsey of the Board of Control this was forced upon the association by the complaints made against a number of road cyclists and protests lodged as to their amateur status. Accordingly the clubs were asked what action would suit them, and out of sixty-five organizations all but four voted to assume control of road racing.

The vote of the clubs wns so overwhelming that official notification was sent to the clubs by Chairman Kelsey under date of April 6. On top of this a number of riders were declared to be professionals, the list including Charles Mock, Louis J. Weintz, Arthur R. Wilcox, Walter Raleigh, Fred T. Warner, Franklin Fisher, Arthur E. Rhodes, Victor J. Lind, John Eubank, Carl Ericson, and O. C. Brandes.

It was this summary action, brought about by stake racing on the Coney Island Boulevard, that stirred those declared professionals to action. They had a host of sympathizers, and the new National Federation of Amateur Cyclists was easily formed to oppose what C. F. Reuf of the Bay View Wheelmen, Chairman of the Federation, chnracterizes as the high-handed proceedings of the National Cycling Association.

It is on the question of affiliation that Chairman Kelsey believes the group of malcontents will strike a snag. By written articles of agreement the National Cycling Association is affiliated with the Amateur Athletic Union, the Federation of American Motorcyclists, the American Automobile Association, and their kindred bodies in this country and abroad with the Union Cyclists Internationals. A person suspended or expelled by the N. C. A. would have practically every legitimate and recognized sport throughout the world closed to him.

As matters stand, amateur riders are between two fires. The National Cycling Association, however, means to force issues. It will discipline in no uncertain fashion riders who race in unsanctioned meets and will particularly take a hand in the great Irvington-Millburn race on Decoration Day.

As an indication that the riders value their National association several have protested to Chairman M. L. Bridgman, New York Athletic Club, of the Board of Appeals, and will have their cases tried. At present both sides are working to line up the cycling clubs favorable to their side of the controversy.

English Cities Adopt P. S. A. L. Plans.

Tha plans and objects of the Public Schools Athletic League are being copied in England, with the result that several leagues are now in process of formation. London, Birmingham, Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, and other big cities are much interested in the athletic development of the New York schoolboys. The leagues will be formed on similar lines to that of the Public Schools Athletic League. It is intended to make intercity contests a feature of the leagues and include all the leading branches of sport in the competition. At the last intercity football game played between the schoolboy Association teams of London and Glasgow over 20,000 spectators witnessed the game.

Beckmann to Head Sunday School A.L.

H. C. Beckmann of Yale has been appointed the physical director of the Sunday School Athletic League, and will have complete charge of the work of the boy athletes who are competing in the games under the auspices of the Sunday schools. He has been identified for several years, since his graduation from Yale, in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, and is located at the West Side Branch, and has given considerable attention to development of athletes there.

Yale Beats Harvard at Chess.

Yale's graduates again triumphed over those of Harvard in the return match at chess on eight boards contested at the Yale Club, on Fifth Avenue, by the score of 5 games to 3. This victory, though complete, was not quite so crushing as in the first meeting, when Old Eli's sons won by 6 to 2. J. Herbert Watson, President of the Brooklyn Chess Club, headed the Yale team, and won his game. A. S. Jameson of the intercollegiate teams of 1904 and 1905 and L. Arnstein of the team of 1895 also assisted the Yale Club.

Daniels's English Championship Plans

C. M. Daniels will not be abla to compete in the world's mile championship in England in July. Daniels cannot go abroad at that time. He will be able to compete in the 220-yard race in August, leaving here for England on August 10, and remaining long enough to defend his title in the 100-yard race in September. Daniels will compete just before he sails for England in the National American championships to be contested at Jamestown during tha first week in August.

BUSY POLO SEASON AT VAN CORTLANDT

Squadron A Will Invite College Teams for Tournament Matches.

HANDICAPS FOR TROOPERS

Yale and Harvard Arranging University Games at Myopia Club in June.

College polo is very likely to be revived this year at Van Cortlandt Park under the auspices of the Squadron A Polo Club. Teams have recently been organized at Yale and Harvard, and plans are now being arranged to hold one, and perhaps two, university polo matches in June, on the grounds of the Myopia Club, near Boston. Two years ago, when Yale and Princeton had polo teams, Squadron A arranged a series of intercollegiate polo games at Van Cortlandt Park, and they aroused wide interest. Efforts were made at Harvard at that time to organize a team, but nothing was accomplished but the presence of Raymond Belmont, at Harvard, who is a frequent player at Meadow Brook during the season, in addition to several young players who practice at Myopia, has led to the formation of a good team. Yale also has several creditable players, including C. P. Dixon and Howard Phipps, who have appeared in several local club events for the last year or two, the former being a member of the Rockaway Club and Phipps of Meadow Brook.

J. O. Nichols, chairman of the Squadron A Polo Committee stated yesterday that with the addition of a number of new players in the Polo Club a more active polo season had been planned for the present season at Van Cortlandt than in previous years. It is the intention of the committee to have a regular match every Saturday. Invitations will be extended to neighboring club teams for special matches, and a series of inter-troop games will also be held. Mr. Nichols has offered a cup for a troop competition next month, and offers of several other cups have been made.

A committee from the squadron will visit West Point within a few days to make arrangements for the game to be played there on May 25 with the military team. Lieut. Col. Robert L. Howze, the West Point Commandant and the delegate from the army polo club, is taking great interest in West Point polo this season, and a number of officers are practicing for the team, in addition to several cadets. A return game will be played on the Van Cortlandt field in October.

Post Office Clerks' Athletic Games.

The members of the New York Post Office Clerks' Association have formed an athletic association and will hold a sat of games at Celtic Park on Sunday, June 2. Many prominent athletes have promised to compete. The special features will be the weight-throwing contest and half-mile inter-city relay. The events are: open-100-yard dash, 440-yard run 880-yard run, one-mile run, hop, skip, and jump, and all-around weight contest. Closed-100-yard dash, 600-yard run, and half-mile relay. Gaelic football and baseball will be included in the programme.

ENGLISH AIRSHIP RACE.

Will Form Part of the Programme for British Olympic Games.

Lord Desborough and Sir Charles Howard Vincent have been appointed English delegates to the International Olympic Games Committee, which will meet at The Hague to-morrow. The principal subject for discussion by the committee is the programme and regulations of the London Olympiad, which is to be held in London in July, 1908. It has been practically decided by the British Olympic Association to have an airship race in connection with the games. Rev. T. de Conrey Lolfan, one of the leading members of the association, is authority for the statement that a long distance race will be arranged, starting from the Stadium, which is to be erected at Shepherd's Bush, London.

Harvard-Columbia Race Grandstand.

The Harvard Athletic Association has determined to erect a grandstand on the Charles River, opposite the finish of the two-mile course over which her crew will row the scheduled race with the Columbia University eight on May 11. Harvard is especially anxious to get into the best shape for the Columbia race, believing it will afford the best sort of preparation for the race with Cornell at Ithaca on Memorial Day.

C. B. Johnstone Heads Leander B.

C. B. Johnstone, President of the Cambridge University Boat Club, has been elected Captain of the Leander crew for the coming season and will head the boat that will make an effort to regain the Grand Challenge Cup lost to Belgium last year. It is expected that an exceptionally strong list of oarsmen will be available for the crew this year, both from Oxford and Cambridge past and present crews.

The Scientific American in a recent editorial on Automobiles significantly says:—"In motor car development the Electric has fully held its own."

Stop a minute and consider what this means—consider what the gasoline car of 1902 and 1903 was and what it is today. This will give you a very vivid illustration of the rapid strides made in the development of the electric as exemplified today in

WORLD'S RECORD BY SCHOOLBOY

MERCERSBURG VICTORS AGAIN

Excellent Records Are Made In All the Events While Close Contests Rule.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 20.—A world's record was created at the Princeton interscholastic games to-day, in which Mercersburg Academy again won the championship trophy easily from the best schoolboy athletes in the Middle States, outside of New York. The new record was made by Talbott, the giant Mercersburg boy, who throws the hammer and puts the shot. He hurled the twelve-pound shot from a regulation circle without follow 190 feet 9 inches, bettering the throw made by Tom Shevlin six years ago by over 8 feet. Talbott also won the shot put and, incidentally broke John R. De Witt's interscholastic record for the twelve-pound contest by over a foot. He put the missile 49 feet 8 inches.

From the standpoint of the excellence of the performances and the closeness of the competitions the meet was the best that has ever been held at Princeton. All the events were well contested, and in nearly every case the records made were close to the best interscholastic standards. J. R. Kilpatrick of Phillips Andover carried off the honors next to Talbott, winning one event and securing two seconds and a third, making a total of 13 points for his team. He won the high hurdles, was second in the low and the broad jump, and third in the shot put. The winners follow:

100-Yard Dash—Won by Black, Mercersburg. Time—10 3-5 seconds.

220-Yard Dash—Won by Black, Mercersburg. Time—23 3-5 seconds.

440-Yard Dash—Won by Hoffstetter, Central High School. Time—54 4-5 seconds.

880-Yard Run—Won by Paull, Mercersburg. Time—2:12 3-5.

One-Mile Run—Won by Paull, Mercersburg. Time—4:49 1-5.

Two-Mile Run—Won by Strong, Hill School. Time—10:48.

120-Yard Hurdles—Won by Kilpatrick, Andover. Time—16 seconds.

220-Yard Hurdles—Won by Haydock, Central High School. Time—27 seconds.

High Jump—Won by Stiles, Mercersburg. Height—5 feet 3 inches.

Running Broad Jump—Won by Hall, Mercersburg. Distance—21 feet 7¾ inches.

Pole Vault—Bleistein, Hill School, and Gamble, Tome Institute. Height—10 feet 6 inches.

Throwing 12-Pound Hammer—Won by Talbott, Mercersburg. Distance—190 feet 9 inches.

Schoolboys in Dual Meet.

In order to develop good athletic material St. Gabriel's School and Public School No. 49 held a set of games at St. Gabriel's Park, Thirty-fifth Street and Second Avenue, yesterday afternoon. The events, which were spiritedly contested, attracted a large attendance. Summaries:

YOUNG ATHLETES OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The games of the Recreation Centres are to be held some time in May in the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory. The Recreation Centres number something like thirty in Greater New York. They derive their names from the playgrounds in the various schools where working boys can go in the evening and enjoy the benefits of the library and gymnasium. The use of the gymnasium and baths, however, is restricted exclusively to club members.

Superstition even prevails among schoolboys. Recently Public School No. 77 presented the champion midget relay team with white caps on which the number of the school is embossed. These caps are invariably worn during the games, but the youngsters think that a hoodoo worse than the slang numeral "23" is attached to them. In the Poly Prep meet they found the handicap too great to even get them a place, and in the Irish-American meet one of the team fell. In the future the boys will run without their caps.

In order to make the training of the boys of Public School No. 6 interesting a novel idea was introduced last winter by L. Peyser and B. Lane, athletic directors of the school. Indoor meets were held in the gymnasium and the class scoring the most number of points was presented with a banner purchased by means of the Athletic Association fund. The scheme has worked well, for it has succeeded in keeping interest in athletics alive, at the same time aiding the boys to keep in excellent trim.

To illustrate the effect of athletics on the rising generation a little incident is worth chronicling. A boy who had been an inveterate truant in one of the private schools was sent to Public School No. 77 by his parents. Vice Principal Adler took the youngster in tow and promised that if he would be obedient and diligent in his studies she would give him an opportunity to join the class team. Inside of a week he showed such qualities that he was permitted to figure in athletics and to-day he is one of the ideal pupils of the school. He is never absent from school and seems to be thoroughly reformed. He has since developed into an excellent runner.

The New York Athletic Club Trophy will be awarded for one year to the school scoring the greatest number of points, 5 for the first, 3 for second, 2 for third, and 1 for fourth. The Richard Webber, Jr., Relay Trophy will be awarded for one year for winning the 880-yard relay. The Evert Jansen Wendell Relay Trophy will go to the school winning the heavyweight class relay event.

Through graduation, Public School No. 6 has lost some of its crack athletes, particularly J. Maher, R. Unger S. Aveline, S. Frank, J. McCauley, and J. Donegan. D. B. Lane and Lazarus Peyser, however, are hard at work developing new timber for the lower grades, and they are of the opinion that the new candidates will more than fill the gap left vacant by the retiring representatives.

A. Patte, one of the best sprinters in Public School No. 77, really believes that he was born under a comet. In two recent events, with victory in his grasp, within sight of the final tape Patte fell each time. Patte, who is but 14 and possessed of the material that hard bumps and annoying rebuffs cannot disturb, is going to try again. He has learned to smile at his adverses and hopes to annex many new laurels before next season.

The annual outdoor games of Public School No. 80, 134th and 133th Streets and Lenox Avenue, will be held on Saturday, May 18, at Pastime Oval, Ninetieth Street and Avenue A. The open events will include: 75-yard dash, 95 pounds limit; 100-yard run, handicap, no weight limit; 220-yard run, handicap, no weight limit; 360-yard relay, (novice,) 80 pounds limit, and invitation relay for championship of B schools, 440 yards, open to Public Schools Nos. 2, 7, 34, 39, 75, 88, and 103.) The winning school will receive a silver cup. The other prizes are: Open Events—Gold, silver, and bronze die medals to first, second and third. Closed Events—Silver die medal to first, and bronze die medal to second.

Little Leslie Killeen of Public School No. 77, who weighs about forty pounds, has announced his intention of trying to qualify for the eighty-pound relay. Principal Page says that Leslie is made of the stuff that counts in these progressive days and intends to encourage the lad.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BASEBALL.

To gain a fair idea of how firm a hold basketball has on the boys attending the public grammar schools in Greater New York one has only to consider the fact that at least 1,380 pupils are actively engaged in the sport. There are ninety-two teams, with an average of fifteen players to each team. For each team put in the field there are at least 100 lads striving for positions, making a sum total of 13,800 enthusiasts.

In 1906 the city appropriated $500,000 for permanent athletic fields, equipping them for the use of public school boys. These grounds have been purchased and are now being graded, and will, it is understood, be completed this Spring. Probably two of them will be used by the end of the current year. One is in a portion of Crotona Park, Borough of the Bronx, and the other is located in Astoria, L. I., just at the end of Ninety-second Street ferry.

The modern puble school lad is a sincere baseball enthusiast in every sense of the word. He is heart and soul in the sport, and never overlooks a chance to further the welfare of the team he happens to represent, or is interested in, if he can possibly help it. During the Winter the boys were busy making preparations for the present season.

They devised various schemes to secure sufficient money to equip their players with the necessary paraphernalia. Schools Nos. 25, 26, 70, 73, 85, and 55 in Brooklyn have accumulated a fund of $200 from concerts, entertainments, &c. Out of this sum they have rented Saratoga Field, Saratoga Avenue and Halsey Street, Brooklyn, for two afternoons during each week.

Public School Championship Meets.

The elementary schools' novice and championship games, arranged by the Public School Athletic League, will be decided at Celtic Park, Long Island City, on June 1 and June 15. The events will be:

50-Pound Class—50-yard dash, running high jump, running broad jump, and 360-yard relay (four-boy team.)

115-Pound Class —70-yard dash, putting 8-pound shot, running broad jump, and 440-yard relay.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Dull, Closing Higher—Banks Report Heavy Loan Expansion.

SURPLUS RESERVES DOWN

Interior Banks Responsible for Changes In Statement—All Reserves Lower.

At the end of the first hour of yesterday's short stock market session a dozen stocks usually among the leaders in activity had not been traded in, and the final figures of the day's business made up the smallest volume of transactions on any half day of the year so far. The dullness was, in fact, as intense as on the two preceding days. Fluctuations were equally narrow, and the buying and selling were due wholly to professional initiative. In the closing fifteen minutes a number of high-priced shares, including Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Union Pacific, were bid up so sharply that they disclosed advances of more than 3 points. The impetus here was plainly due to the desire of traders to recover stocks which they had sold short early in the day, perhaps upon the continued inflow of unfavorable advices from the wheat country. They found the market so narrow that they were forced to bid up stocks in order to cover their positions. Outside of the dispatches detailing the further progress of grain pests in Kansas and Oklahoma and those setting forth the extreme need of moisture in these sections there was little news for the consideration of financial markets. The cables reported conditions of inactivity at the foreign centres equal to those in control here and London was neither a buyer nor a seller of stocks in this market. A heavy increase in loans with accompanying reduction in the surplus of the banks had been plainly indicated by the developments of the week in the money markets, and the publication of the weekly statement bearing out these preliminary forecasts was, therefore, without market effect. The activity in high-priced stocks at the close of the session served to call attention to the peculiar position which such shares may occupy from this time on from the investment point of view. The financial community has become accustomed to high quotations for such issues for the reason that, in addition to the dividends of 7 per cent. or so which they return in most cases, they have heretofore yielded a much higher return owing to the frequent grants of stock dividends in one form or another. The difficulty with which the Great Northern carried through its recent programme of a stock increase and the widespread hostility of State Legislatures and Railroad Comissions to capital additions of this kind suggest that in the future corporations may find it impossible to make such substantial gifts to their stockholders in this form as they have been able to do in the past. Without these extra dividends it will be incumbent upon the investor to appraise such shares by their regular dividend yield only.

An increase of approximately $25,000,000 in loans through the operation of the same forces which produced an increase of $37,000,000 a week ago led to the reduction of surplus by $4,148,000, leaving that item at $11,704,000, a figure comparing not unfavorably with the surplus at this time in previous years. Withdrawals of cash by interior banks and the shifting of loans carried by them to the shoulders of local institutions as a result of the lower interest rates of the week were responsible for the showing, which was also influenced by extensive syndicate operations. It is of interest to note in this connection that the returns of the country's National banks to the Controller under the call of March 22 show an increase of $304,000,000 in loans compared with a year ago and an increase of only $46,000,000 cash as an offset to this loan expansion. The reserve percentage of National banks as a whole is substantially below that of a year ago.

TO COMPLETE CHICAGO ROAD.

CHICAGO, April 20.—A syndicate is forming here for the purpose of completing the Chicago Southern Railway. The managers are John R. Walsh, John N. Falthorn, and Orville E. Babcock. It is proposed to raise $2,500,000 to put the road in operation to Chicago. The track is laid with the exception of forty miles, the grading for which has been completed.

The entrance to Chicago will be over the tracks of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Company.

BALTIMORE TRADING.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 20.—The time for depositing Merchants and Miners' Transportation stock with the Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Baltimore as trustee for a term of fifty years expired to-day. On April 29 the stockholders of the Merchants and Miners' Company will meet to authorize an increase in the capital stock from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000, and it is planned to deposit all the new stock. The Winsor Line will be paid for with an issue of $3,250,000 of 4 per cent. twenty-five year debenture bonds, to be authorized by the Merchants and Miners' stockholders, while $2,500,000 of the new stock will go to the New England Navigation Company in exchange for $2,000,000 of New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad stock, the latter to be sold to the remaining $500,000 of the Merchants and Miners' holdings not distributed among the present stockholders of the Merchants and Miners' Company. TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Blackboards in wire houses presented a skeleton effect yesterday, reflecting very forcibly the nature of the market. Few stocks were active, and the number that showed quotations at all were only about 30 per cent. of the entire list. One watchful individual figured out that almost one hundred stocks showed no quotations at all, and such as St. Paul were not quoted until after 11 o'clock. Whatever animation there was did not develop until after the publication of an unexpectedly bad bank statement. The tone of ths market at the close was the direct reverse of what the bank statement might have been expected to inspire. This is one of the paradoxes of the market, and it may or may not mean that the ill-effects had been discounted. Naturally the bank statement was not liked, but the comment on it was that if it inspired a strong closing it had lost somewhere some of its evil attributes.

Colorless and uninteresting as yesterday's market was, it revealed a stirring of speculative dry bones and premonitory symptoms of unrest in offices whers traders foregather. The faithful watchers at the ticker seemed to be imbued with the idea that this dullness is too pronounced to last, that it is symptomatic of a gradual change, and that a quick change might come at any moment. A day or so ago the habitués of these offices were dolorous in their complaints and pessimistic in their predictions of dullness. The psychic element that wrought the change overnight is difficult to determine. Possibly it is only the wish for a more active market finding vent in a chorus of hopefulness. Brokers were too depressed to enthuse over this mental reaction, and the volunteers of hope were not sanguine enough of their own inspiration to back it up with orders.

***

An analysis of the market of the last week or so shows that attention has been concentrated on a few stocks, and these in most cases the highly speculative issues. This is a symptom of professional trading, for this class of operators wants a quick market, and stocks susceptible to real or manufactured influences. Rumors are sometimes developed from a hazy conception of current events, but most often they are developed as collateral support to a trading position. Ethical considerations are lacking, and quick action is most desired. Stocks with limited following respond slowly to anything but real facts, and the percentage of fact to fiction in stock gossip is so small that it is almost intangible. Thus the professional, in a dull market, trades in a stock where ont of an abundance of gossip he may find one small influence making for a price movement worth while.

***

Dull times seem to beget prophetic inspirations, due, perhaps, to the lack of employment for agile wits in other directions. There is no possible happening in the next thirty days that has not been labeled and charted in soma brokerage house by customers recuperating from the exciting events of the last month. The essential requirements for these market seers to evolve a theory and positive prediction are a dull market and indifference or assumed contempt on the part of some one else. It is harmless enjoyment, but it manages to get into verbal circulation, at times assuming the form of real, tangible information.

Many brokerage houses which were content to handle customers' accounts on the orthodox ten point margin, have intimated recently that a more liberal balance would be appreciated hereafter, except in the case of low priced stocks. Panic days make ten points look small, and margin is wiped out before the required notice can reach the customer. Sometimes the account is carried, and if the client be unable to put up more money the house loses, with slight hope of getting its money back. Many brokers are inclined to believe that there is little protection in ten points, and there is basis for their belief in recent happenings.

***

Gamblers make bad traders, according to men who know despite any impressions to the contrary. As a general rule they take a fixed position on a stock, and advice, good or bad, has little effect. The instinct that luck governs regulates their operations, and many a man who is regarded as a wizard in the glamor of the gas light is a plaything of the speculative elements when he dabbles in stocks. One of this class was long of a certain industrial before the panic, and his broker was bearish. He carried the stock despite good advice, carried to a point where his own and his friends' resources were exhausted. His broker did not sell him out, and stood to lose heavily. When the rally came, and the logic of the game was that a reaction was again due, he refused to let go. But the reaction came and he found his broker firm, not complaisant. Before he can again tempt the fuck of the tape, he will have to woo fortune at the wheel or on the green cloth.

***

Good resolutions have been more plentiful in the last month, than at New Year's or the beginning of Lent, but they related to future speculation, rather than to anything more cheering and exhilarating. Every man, after he makes a big loss, vows to bo careful thereafter or to quit altogether. There is ono man of national prominence who plays the game for fun who, for the fourth time, resolved to quit some time ago. Every big break in three years has found him on the wrong side of the market. A year ago, he emphasized his resolve oy having his tickers removed. But he was in it again on March 14. He cleared up, quit, and went to Europe, enjoining his staff never to talk stocks to him again. A day or so ago, a house with London connections sent to his office Here notices of purchases of 10,000 shares. It surprised no one. He does it for fun, but it sometimes costs him half a million at a clip. His humor is subtle.

STOCKS IN LONDON DULL AND LOWER

Markets Have Not Profited by Cheap Money — Various Causes to Blame.

LONG LIST OF NEW ISSUES

Belief That the Bank of France Means to Get Back All Its Gold Also Having an Effect on Trading.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, April 20.—For a short time money has been cheap this week, hut the stock markets have not profited by the cheapness. Business in all departments has been almost at a standstill and the general tendency has been toward lower prices.

A number of causes contributed toward this somewhat anomalous situation. The issue of new investment securities has perhaps done as much as anything to decrease interest in Stock Exchange specialties. There is quite a long list of these new securities, including those already on the market and those coming along in a few days.

There are the London County Council loan of £5,000,000, the Straits Settlements loan of the same amount, the Indian loan of £3,000,000, another instalment of Irish land stock, the German bond issue, in which, it is hoped, London will invest heavily, and, in addition, a lot of industrial corporation loans, such as that of the Aluminum Company, which wants £500,000. Contemplating all these issues, which are being offered on attractive terms, people seem to reason that there will not be much money for some time available for operations in the stock markets.

The belief that the Bank of France has determined to get back from London every shilling's worth of the gold it sent here to relieve the market at the close of last year is, of course, having some effect. London owes the Bank of France £2,000,000, and that is quite an item in times like these.

There is also other foreign money in this market. The Statist says the balances of French hanks here are much larger than is generally supposed, and everybody knows that the Japanese Government is employing a large sum in the London loan and discount markets. A number of colonial governments also have a good deal of money here. It is reasoned that no dependence can be placed on any of these funds, and that, therefore, it is unsafe to assume that the money case now prevailing is going to be permanent. Furthermore, there is considerable Continental liquidation going on in this market.

All these factors make for caution on the part of speculators and the public.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

LONDON, April 20.—Supplies of money were easily obtainable in the market today. Discounts were weak.

Trading on the Stock Exchange continued dull and uninteresting owing to the absence of public support. Some home rails received moderate attention, but otherwise the prices of British securities and foreigns scarcely moved.

Americans opened at about parity, hardened fractionally during the session, and closed steady after a small amount of business.

Copper shares were in good demand.

Money, 1¼@2 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3⅛ per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three months' bills is 3¼@3⅜ per cent.

PARIS, April 20.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened unsteady, with trading inactive. The tone improved at the close. Russian Imperial 4s were unquoted. Russian bonds of 1904 closed at 495.

Three per cent. rentes, 94f 40c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 20c for checks.

BERLIN, April 20.—Business on the Boerse to-day was stagnant. Prices mostly were somewhat lower. Americans were almost unchanged.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 47½ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: short bills, 4 per cent.; three months' bills, 4½ per cent.

A reduction of the discount rate of the Imperial Bank of Germany is expected to be announced on Tuesday or Wednesday next.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Another Heavy Increase in Loans—Surplus Down Over $4,000,000.

The bank statement yesterday revealed a further heavy shifting of loans from non-reporting institutions to the banks in the Clearing House, this being reflected by an increase of $25,347,800 in the loans reported hy the associated hanks. Large financial operations, including the $30,000,000 payment made during the week on account of the American Telephone and Telegraph bond issue, were regarded as in part responsible for the increase in loans, but the chief cause of the additions to this item, as was the case the previous week, was said to be the shifting of loans from the trust companies and from out-of-town banks to the Clearing House banks.

With the increase of over $25,000,000 in loans there was an increase of $26,501,600 in deposits, with an increase of $6,625,400 in reserve shipments. Cash, on the other hand, showed an increase of $2,477,300, which reduced the loss in surplus to $4,148,100. The banks now hold $11,704,825 in excess of requirements, compared with $16,366,725 at this time a year ago.

The cotton market was active and generally steady to firm in spite of realizing for the week end. Sales for the day were estimated at 150,000 hales, and the market closed steady at a net advance of 2@4 points. The opening was steady at unchanged prices to en advance of 2 points. Strong spot reports and low temperatures in the belt alarmed the shorts, and there was soon an active demand. Transactions included several good-sized blocks, and the total sales estimated represented a large half-session in the market. The bullish visible supply statement had a considerable influence on the English market, which was 2@5 points higher at the close, when due to come about 2@3½ points higher, and the English spot market was 9 points higher on sales of 10,000 bales. Local spot firms said that their firm offers from Texas had been withdrawn, owing to higher bids from exporters, and it was rumored that a considerable block of cotton had been sold during the last few days for shipment from the local stock.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—The weather was responsible for a strong advance in wheat yesterday and an active covering movement among shorts who did not care to have much interest on that side of the market over Sunday. In addition to cold weather and drought news there was a very general complaint about extensive insect damage in Kansas and Oklahoma and of delayed seeding in the Northwest. Over a widespread area in the West there was killing frost. Reports from Southern Russia indicated similar unseasonable seeding and spring was very late. Liverpool closed 1¼@1¾d higher. Northwest receipts were 621 cars against 156 cars last week. Cash wheat in New York closed as follows: No. 2 red, 84c elevator and 85c free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 86½c, and No. 2 hard Winter, 88¾c, free on board, afloat opening navigation.

CORN.—This market was also very firm, due to the strength in wheat, an advance of 1½@3d at Liverpool, and a fair cash trade. Commission houses were good buyers in the West, principally of May and July. Exporters bought 8 loads and the cash corn at New York closed as follows: No. 2, 58c, elevator, and 54½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 57c, and No. 2 yellow, 54¾c, free on board, afloat.

WARNING OF DANGER IN RAILWAY BAITING

ROADS TAKING FRIGHT

That the present agitation against the railroads, if continued, will cause dire consequences is the statement made in a circular signed by a number of railroad supply houses in Chicago and Pittsburg, which has recently been given wide circulation.

A copy of this circular received in this city yesterday draws attention to the fact that there are about 400 bills, all of them affecting more or less unfavorably the interests of the railroads, now pending in the several State Legislatures. The manufacturers of railroad supplies and the dealers in them who have signed the circular suggest that the most effective way to check this movement against the railroads would be a letter addressed to the Governor of his State by every man who may he convinced that the legislation against the railroads should be halted.

The circulation of this document by a largs hody of business men 's in line with the resolutions recently adopted hy Boards of Trade in Philadelphia and other cities deprecating the general outcry against corporations and pointing out the harm that is likely to come from the present agitation unless it is kept within bounds.

This is the text of the circular, which is of interest as an expression of the opinions held by many manufacturers and others whose business is likely to suffer directly from enforced retrenchment by the railroads.

First—Business has been and is prosperous. There is apparently no commercial reason why wa should not enjoy a continuance of such prosperity, unless some unnecessary conditions intervene.

Second—The National Government has been and is investigating the railroads. The State Legislatures havo pending 400 bills, none of which is for the benefit of the railroads, but every one is designed to reduce in some way the net earnings of the roads. Many village and town authorities are passing ordinances which interfera with the operation of the roads and reduce their revenues. The public press has given wide circulation to all this agitation and in many instances approved of it.

Third—The railroads are stopping all unnecessary expenditures for this year. For instance, one road has stopped construction of 700 miles of new track; another has cut its expenditures $5,000,000 and stopped work on 400 miles of track in addition. Many roads have issued instructions to use stocks on hand and not to buy anything for six months, except to meet great emergencies. Furthermore, railroads generally have stopped all plans for expenditures for 1908. No new orders are now being placed by the roads for next year.

We know that if present conditions continue, all classes of labor and every business interest will be injured. We know that every manufacturer, every jobber, and every retailer in the United States does business directly or indirectly with railroads or their officials or employes. We know that the railroad interest is, owing to farming, the largest in the country. We know that when the railroads begin to economize its seriously affects every other business. We know that under such conditions labor will suffer very greatly and that men will be seeking employment.

We believe that the time to act, before the damage is done, and that every man who reads this should act. If 10 per cent. of the men in the United States would to-day write to the Governors of the States in which they live, and to their representatives in the State Legislature, stating that this agitation was injuring their business and that it must be stopped, it would be stoped. Every one of these public servants would listen, because every writer is a voter.

We do not object to the regulation of the railroads by the National Government in the proper manner, but we do object to going through a period of hard times similar to that between 1893 and 1897 in order to accomplish alleged railroad reform. The situation is serious. Immediate action is necessary or business will diminish, bank accounts will be reduced, profits will disappear, salaries will be cut, wages decreased, men discharged, and thousands will be looking for work. Every laboring man, every business man, every professional man is and will be affected. He should act now.

It is stated that already many letters inspired by this circular has been sent out.

MERRITT UPHOLDS UTILITIES BILL

THE PUBLIC PARTNERS

Theory Upon Which the Measure Was Drafted—Bill Criticised by Lieut. Gov. Chanler.

The public will be taken into partnership by the public service corporations if the Utilities bill becomes law, according to a speech delivered last night at Delmonico's before the Westchester County Bar Association by Assemblyman Merritt of St. Lawrence County. He spoke strongly in its favor and brought out a reply from Lieut. Gov. Chanler.

Mr. Merritt said in part:

Assemblyman Merritt's Speech.

The public service bills now before the Legislature are based upon the theory that the grantees who have corporate rights to conduct railroads and other public utilities are not the masters nor the servants of the public, but are in fact its partners. The commissions to be appointed are to be the representatives of the people; to be, so to speak, the members of the Board of Directors representing that interest.

"In criticising the bills themselves, the opponents of the measures have made particular objection on three specific points. The bills give the Governor the power to remove Commissioners without additional affirmative action by the Senate or any other body. It is necessary to do this in order that the responsibility may be centralized. These Commissioners are the arm of the State Government.

"The second principal objection that has been urged to the bills is that they do not provide a specific method of court review over the orders of this Commission. The act does provide, and if it did not provide it would still be the law, that any act of the Commission which is unconstitutional is subject to review, and it is not necessary to tell any lawyer now he may get into court on any proposition of this sort.

"The corporations also have another method of appeal which the people of the State take advantage of frequently. They may appeal to the Legislature, the representatives of the people, provided the acts of the Commission are oppressive. Neither the Legislature nor the people desire to see wrong done to the public service corporations. They do, however, desire and intend to have a sort of treatment from these corporations which has not been their practice.

Commission's Authority.

"It is, however, the belief of the framers of this bill that the most important thing to make this Commission a useful part of the State Government is to provide that when its orders are issued the corporation shall immediately begin to obey. It is unfair to assume that this Commission provided by these bills will act in a foolish or unwarranted manner.

"We do things in this State piecemeal, a step at a time. No one will disagree with me when I say that an ideal way to get at this subject would be to enact a new statute containing all the substantive law affecting the organization, control, rights, duties, and obligations of all corporations deriving their powers from the State, or any sub-division thereof; and having enacted this statute, and repealed all other statutes in any way conflicting, to constitute a commission or commissions to see that this law was obeyed. Doubtless this will some time be done. But as we do things in this State, and as men do things generally, such an ideal arrangement of law can only be expected in the distant future.

"The third objection which has been greatly dwelt upon is that the Legislature has no constitutional right to delegate such broad powers to any commission. I will not undertake to read a brief on this subject or cite cases. I think it is the opinion of most lawyers that this Constitution is broad enough so that the powers sought to be given can be delegated.

"The corporations are complaining that they are not permited under these bills to carry as an asset the value of the franchises. They should not be permitted to do so, unless it might be for the amount on which they pay actual taxes through the franchise tax department and under the operation of the franchise tax law. Whatever inducement the public may feel disposed to give to corporations doing semi-public service, it is absurd to permit them to take a valuable gift, estimate its value as an asset, and then expect the public to pay a dividend upon it.

Will Settle Public Attacks.

"The enactment of these bills in recognition of the principle on which they are based will do more than anything that can at present be done to settle the public mind, and to do away with the unreasoning and unreasonable attacks of the misinformed or partially informed upon those interests which are affected. They are essentially conservative measures for the reason which I have given. Their acceptance and the acceptance of the principle on which they stand, whether it be final or not, will solve in a manner which commends itself to the good sense and fairness of the people generally many of the vexed questions with which we are now attempting to deal.

"The cry against these bills does not come from the operating departments of railroads or public service lighting companies to any great extent. It comes from the financial district—from what we know as Wall Street—a region in which men deal and speculate in profits; where they hold the skimmer and take off the cream of every enterprise. Those of us who live outside the City of New York, up the State, appreciate as men in the city of New York do not appreciate that every county in this State pays tribute to this magnificent city. All the wealth here is produced outside. Our farms and factories and mines and quarries and water powers are making a ceaseless effort to add to the greatness and the splendor of this imperial city. Sometimes gentlemen who speculate in profits imagine that they are doing business. This is a harmless hallucination.

Mr. Chanler's Address.

Lieut. Gov. Chanler paid a high tribute to the fearless public service of Mr. Merritt, but said he could not resist the opportunity, the first he had since Jan. 1, to reply to a speech made in his presence.

"I have no desire to speak in a partisan way or to hamper the Governor of the State," he said. "I have always desired to support him when he has proposed measures approved by the people who elected both him and me. But as a lawyer speaking to lawyers, there are several matters I would like to object to in Mr. Merritt's speech.

"He has said that the Public Utilities measure is finally approved by the people. I take issue with that. Did the people know of the measure before it was introduced in the Legislature? Public opinion has yet to speak upon it."

He said that public opinion was above the court of last resort. The people are bound by the Constitution and the court of last resort interprets the Constitution.

Then Lieutenant Governor went on to criticise Mr. Merritt's statement that the Board of Commissioners should be the right hand of the Governor. He said that they ought to be elective officers, and reminded him that the power he was putting into the hands of Gov. Hughes would also be in the hands of those who came after him.

He urged that the Commissioners should represent the people and not the Administration, and that they should not belong to one political party. Like the Inter-State Commerce Commission, they should be governed by a provision to insure the representation of the political party in the minority.

"I speak not only for the Executive and the Senate," concluded the Lieutenant Governor, "but for the Assembly. I speak for the people of this State. Trust the people and the State is safe."

Edward C. Whittaker of the New York Bar Association criticised most severely the lengthy opinions written by Justices of the Appellate Divisions. "Veritable haystacks of verbiage," he called them, which led lawyers to confusion and sometimes destruction.

KILLED HERSELF FOR DOWIE.

Mrs. Lydia Staley, Grieving Over His Death, Jumps from Window.

Grieving because of the death of Alexander Dowie, Mrs. Lydia Staley, 36 years old, threw herself from the front window of her home on the fifth story of the six-story apartment house 779 East 174th Street, the Bronx, yesterday morning, and died later from a fracture of the skull.

Mrs. Staley lived with her husband, George Bishop Staley, and a daughter, Marion. The Staleys were disciples of Dowie, the self-styled prophet of Zion City, and were leading members of the cult in this city. During all of Dowie's troubles with his opponents, and even after he had been deposed by Voliva, the Staleys remained faithful to Dowie. Since his death they had mourned him as though he were a blood relative, and night and morning prayers ascended for the repose of his soul.

Bowed with grief as he sat in the office of Coroner Schwannecke yesterday, Staley told how his wife had grieved after the prophet. He said that her accustomed weight had been for a number of years close to 142 pounds, but since Dowie's death she had dropped down to 65 pounds, which was her weight a day or two ago. He said she had refused to eat more than the merest trifle at long intervals, and had become ill from this enforced fasting, and that literally she had worn herself down to a shadow through grief. He believed she had grieved so intensely that her mind must have been affected.

Dowie, according to the husband, was the principal topic of conversation in the Staley home and the principal subject of their prayers. Yesterday morning Mrs. Staley herself conducted the morning devotions, and the couple with their daughter Marion sat down to breakfast. A moment later Mrs. Staley arose and went into the parlor. A few seconds later Staley heard a noise, and he rushed into the parlor just in time to see his wife disappear head first out of the open window. Staley made a grab for her, but only succeeded in catching hold of the slippers she wore. They came off her feet, and the wife plunged to her death.

Policeman Du Bois of the Tremont Avenue Police Station, who was near at hand, sent in a hurry call for Dr. P. Placek of Fordham Hospital, who found that the woman had a fractured skull. She was taken to the hospital, and died there an hour later.

ADMIRES OUR ZOO.

Dr. Mitchell Sails for Home—President Gives Him Antelope and Does.

Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, F. R. S., Secretary of the Zoological Society of London, sailed for home yesterday morning on the Cunarder Campania. Dr. Mitchell spent three weeks here as the guest of Andrew Carnegie, and in that time saw something of the zoological parks of the East. He takes with him the promise of a male prong-horned antelope and two does, the gift of President Roosevelt to the London Zoo.

Speaking of the Bronx Park Gardens, Dr. Mitchell said: "It is one of the finest show places that I visited. As to actual area, the garden is about six times larger than ours in London. Everything is up to date. Of course, the advantage lies in the fact that the zoo here is newer, and so you have had the advantage of constructing a new place after the best models of Europe, and with every advantage which modern science and sanitation can suggest.

"I was especially pleased with the buffalo range and the quarters for many of the larger animals. Although our London gardens are smaller than Bronx Park, our floral display is greatly in advance of yours, and our animal exhibit more complete. The consequence of this is that our London park presents a much better appearance than the Bronx Park Gardens. In London we spend, it seems to me, far more money in laying out our grounds. Then perhaps we have more money to spend, for the reason that we charge an admission fee.

"But as the Bronx Gardens are new and have not been completed, it may be an injustice to compare them with ours at home. The Philadelphia gardens come nearer to what we have in London. They are about the same size, and laid out much the same.

"The Washington Zoo occupies an ideal spot, but they don't seem to have begun to take advantage of the magnificent natural conditions existing there. It ought to be the best zoological garden in this country, but they have a long way to climb before they can get on the same level with the zoo in this city.

"I would place the order of the four best zoological gardens in the world with London first, then Berlin, then Amsterdam, and then New York, as they follow in the order named. Paris might be a possible fifth."

While in Washington Dr. Mitchell spent several hours with the President. The former said that the gift of the Chief Executive would be appreciated in London. The antelope and the does, he said, are still running about in Yellowstone Park, but they will shortly be shipped to London.

"I understand they are very difficult to catch," he said, "and I know it would have been impossible for us to have obtained them except through the kindness of the President."

TREE FOR WHITE'S GRAVE.

Widow of the Murdered Architect Plants a Pear-Shaped Cedar.

A large pear-shaped cedar tree has been placed over the grave of Stanford White at St. James by his widow, Mrs. White thought the artistic surroundings of her husband's grave would not be complete without the addition of a cedar tree, and so she drove many miles around various sections of Long Island seeking just such a tree as she wanted.

She found an almost perfect tree upon the premises of Jacob B. Conklin, a druggist of Smithtown Branch. Mrs. White offered a large sum for the tree, it is said, which Conklin accepted. A low truck was obtained from Mineola, twenty-six miles distant. The tree was then hauled on the truck by four horses to Stanford White's grave.

HANGED HIMSELF ON SHIP.

Alien, About to be Deported, Commits Suicide on the St. Louis.

About to be deported on the American liner St. Louis because he had become a public charge, Saul Sobitch, 27 years old, a Pole, committed suicide by hanging himself just before the vessel sailed for Southampton yesterday morning.

The man came to this country about six months ago and while working as a gardener on Long Island, developed symptoms of insanity. He was taken to the State Hospital for the Insane on Long Island. The Immigration authorities were notified and they took him to the St. Louis for deportation under the alien law.

Left alone yesterday morning, Sobitch took a heavy string, which was about his belongings, and hanged himself to a deck beam. He was dead when discovered. His body was removed from the vessel before she sailed without any of her passengers knowing of his death.

ROADS DEPARTMENT PLANNED FOR STATE

Legislators Say a Great Mass of Work Needs Undivided Attention.

AFRAID TO PLAY POLITICS

So Republicans Have Not Put Forward the Plan This Year—A Commission of Inquiry.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 20.—While the Public Utilities bill and other measures on the reform programme of Gov. Hughes have obtruded themselves on the public view the legislators have been quietly and patiently at work in another field of constructive legislation which has presented many vexing problems. The subject is that of good roads.

Highway legislation has been an important feature of every legislative session for the last ten years. The number of bills affecting roads introduced this year has been so large that many legislators favor the establishment of a State Department of Public Highways. A bill to establish such a department has already been drafted. It has been held up because the State Engineer, who has charge of this important department, is a Democrat, and the Republicans realize that any attempt to take these important powers away from him would lay them open to a charge of playing politics.

With approximately 7,000 miles of State roads to be constructed within the next few years and $50,000,000 appropriated for this purpose, it is asserted by legislative leaders that in order to promote economy and a settled policy of work the creation of such a department is necessary. It is likely that the necessary legislation will be introduced next session.

This plan would enable the Legislature to shift to such a commission many matters which now claim its attention to the exclusion of other subjects. Many details call for expert treatment which such a department would afford. To pave the way for it Senator Hooker of Genesee has introduced a bill providing for a commission to take the whole subject under investigation during the coming Summer.

Senator Armstrong of Rochester, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said to-day that the creation of such a department was an absolute necessity.

"It is not money that will insure good roads," said Mr. Armstrong, "but brains. The money has been provided for and a policy mapped out. What is needed is the brains to carry out that policy in a manner that will promote the best interests of the State and insure the people of a fair return for this vast expenditure.

"In my opinion the only logical solution of the problem is to be found in the creation of a department which could devote itself exclusively to the promotion of good roads. Such a department would have the experts that the Legislature has not. The State Engineer, who, of course, must be an expert, and who has supervision over the good roads work at present, cannot give the department his undivided attention. He has also supervision of the work on the barge canal, which claims most of his time."

Under tha present system applications from various localities in the State for road improvements go to the State Engineer, who then is required to make an investigation and to approve or disapprove of the request. An attaché of the State Engineers' department said:

"Why, the Republicans must have been asleep all these years not to realize what a good thing they had. Let me tell you that if the West bill becomes law we can go into any county we might desire and come pretty near breaking up the Republican machine."

The West bill, which is one of the good roads measures before the present Legislature, provides that the State shall pay the entire cost of road construction. Under the present law the State is paying 50 per cent. of the cost of construction and maintenance of the main or market roads of the State. The remaining 50 per cent. is paid by the localities themselves on the basis of 35 per cent. to the county and 15 per cent. to the town directly benefited.

Under this system there have been constructed about 500 miles of the proposed 7,500 miles of roads planned. But requests for new roads have been coming in so fast that it has become apparent the State would not be able to keep up with the demand out of the regular funds that could be set aside and made available every year.

For that reason the $50,000,000 bond issue was provided for. With this fund the State, besides pinching its 50 per cent. of the money necessary for road construction in any given locality at the disposal of the authorities, has also granted to towns and counties loans to the extent of their 50 per cent. of the cost of construction and permitted them to pay it back on the installment plan. Under this plan even the poorest county is enabled to build its road immediately and let future generations who are to directly benefit pay for the work.

"One difficulty that has arisen in connection with the good roads work," said Senator Armstrong, "is due to the fact that the cupidity of one locality or another has been able to get in its work. Through their representatives in the Legislature they have had introduced measures providing for special legislation in the interest of their own vicinity, but entirely out of keeping with the State scheme of road improvement. It is largely to do away with this and to do away with the chaotic conditions existing at present that I am in favor of a commission vested with the necessary powers to do the work under a uniform plan.

"Another benefit of such a plan would be that when the various localities now do their work with State funds the State would do the work itself and the roads could be laid out according to a system where every link would fit into the chain."

BACKING FOR DRIVEWAY BILL.

Residents of Queens Want Forest Park Road and Eastern Parkway Joined.

Assemblyman De Groot's bill to provide a driveway to connect Forest Park Driveway with Eastern Parkway by passing through a portion of Cypress Hills Cemetery is being backed by many of the people of Queens Borough. John Adikes of Jamaica, one of the leading figures of the Allied Civics of Queens, sent letters yesterday to many prominent persons requesting that they urge the members of the Cities Committee of the Senate to report favorably the De Groot bill, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator Harte.

The cemetery people, in opposing the bill, said the driveway was not needed now, but may be needed fifteen years from this time. The Allied Civics make the point that fifteen years hence there will be thousands of bodies in the now unused portion of Cypress Hills Cemetery, and that present action will obviate the necessity of disturbing the dead.

If the driveways were connected autobobilists would have one continuous good road from Brooklyn to the eastern end of Long Island, passing through Forest Park from end to end.

INSPECT NEW FERRY SITE.

Aldermanic Committee Goes to Whitestone to Look Over the Project.

The Aldermanic Committee on Docks, Navigation, and Ferries visited Whitestone yesterday to look over the site of the slip on the Queens Borough side for the proposed ferry between Whitestone and Fort Schuyler on the Bronx side. A resolution favoring such a ferry was introduced recently in the Board of Aldermen.

The visiting Aldermen, headed by Chairman Henry Clay Peters, were met at Whitestone by a committee from the Whitestone Improvement Association and taken in stages and cabs to the foot of Eleventh Avenue, where it is proposed to have the slip on the Queens Borough side. The Aldermen were later entertained at luncheon at Knab's Hotel.

Dana Wallace of Whitestone, who spoke before the Aldermen recently in favor of the ferry, said yesterday: "We at the northern end of the borough are separated from the Bronx by something less than a mile of water, and yet we now have to travel twenty-five miles to reach the Bronx. The establishment of the ferry would be a real boon to the people of Queens Borough and the Bronx. The land for the ferry slips belongs to the city, so that no condemnation proceedings would be necessary. Two or three boats that used to run on the old Thirty-ninth Street ferry could be used, and the service could be started as soon as the slips are ready."

There will be a public meeting at Whitestone on next Friday night to discuss the ferry project.

The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg, it was stated yesterday, has outstanding $1,000,000 of one year 6 per cent. notes. These were issued in March last and were put out to provide temporarily for capital requirements which later will be covered by bonds, which the road proposes to issue.

THE MIGHTY AWAKENING OF THE CHINESE EMPIRE.

Its Concrete Manifestation Found in the Complete Reorganization of the Army on a Thoroughly Modern Basis—Hints from Every Civilized Nation.

Remarkable Edict Authorizing the New Military Force of 1,500,000 Men a Veritable Compendium of Wisdom and Philosophy—The Man Who Did It.

China no longer sleeps. She is preparing to take a place among the powers of the earth, and the article to which this page is devoted gives a most convincing picture of the significant and portentous transformation now taking place within her borders.

CHINESE SOLDIERS ON THE MARCH ENGLISH INSTRUCTION.

THE recent order for two million rifles given by the Chinese Empire to a German firm means that the day of the "Yellow Peril" has dawned at last. It has been a long time coming, this martial awakening of China, which Western writers on Oriental affairs have been predicting soberly for so many years, but it has arrived finally with tremendous energy. There is intense and genuine earnestness in the efforts which the Imperial Party is now putting forth to bring about the military regeneration of the empire. And its purpose is frankly avowed, the imperial glance." In a formal edict commanded the working out of the great reform referred to its motive in this question:

"How else shall we become able to resist foreign insult or put down internal dissensions?"

To accomplish those two results a programme has been adopted calling for an army of a million and a half men, scientifically trained, well officered, and thoroughly equipped. It is to be a modern army, modeled on the German-Japanese system that has met the hard test of tremendous war. And it is to be a national army. The old heterogeneous mixture of rough, dissolute, and undisciplined provincial forces, enlisted from the Bannermen, or hereditary soldiers of the old régime, is to be done away with. The new soldiers swear allegiance directly to the Throne, and not to provincial authority. They are recruited from among the respectable families of every section of the empire, and may be sent to any part of the country, or to foreign countries, on the business of the Throne.

The size of the task that has been undertaken may be realized from consideration of these facts: For centuries the military service has been regarded throughout the empire as the lowest in the social scale, and a deep-seated prejudice against it has existed among all classes of the people. Side by side with this condition there has existed in every walk of life a corruption utterly incompatible with efficient military service. Now the Chinese authorities have undertaken to make the people martial and honest by law. It is a reform that goes to the heart of the Chinese system.

It has been undertaken with extraordinarily clearsighted judgment of the Chinese, with an astonishingly frank recognition of their limitations and with a profound determination to make it successful. Whether its full accomplishment is possible or not is matter of doubt among those who have made the closest study of the Chinese from the best points of advantage. Such eminent Japanese as Ambassador Aoki and Marquis Ito have expressed the opinion that it will fail. Proudly conscious of the martial spirit of their own people, they used the same words in voicing their opinion.

"You must remember that the Chinese have no Samurai."

The Work of Yuan-Shih-Kai.

The man to whom, more than to all others, the reformation now undertaken is due is Yuan-Shih-Kai. In the war with Japan he commanded the Chinese forces at Ping-Yang, and that was the only occasion during the war when the Japanese met real resistance. He saw that his defeat was due to superior organization and training, and from that time began to work for the reorganization of the Chinese Army.

Soon after the settlement of the Boxer troubles Yuan-Shih-Kai was made Viceroy of Chi-Li, and while he worked with his provincial forces he conducted a propaganda for national military reform. Japan helped him. She sought to inspire the Chinese with the spirit of resistance to aggression, and her General Staff drew up for Yuan a complete plan of army reorganization. The old Ling-pu, or Board of War, had proved its utter worthlessness. Yuan-Shih-Kai knew that nothing was to be hoped for from it. He convinced Prince Ching, the successor of Li-Hung-Chang, of the necessity for reform, and together they memorialized the Throne for the appointment of a special commission to consider the entire subject of the situation of the empire and the reformation of the military system. The memorial was successful, and an edict was issued appointing a board of four members, called the Lien-Ping-Chu, or "Office for the Reorganization of the Forces."

The tituiar head of this board is Prince Ching, but Yuan-Shih-Kai is the real head, and he is the embodiment and personification of the idea of military reform. The development of a great fighting force for China is his chief ambition. He is not radically antagonistic to foreigners, but he is bent on furnishing the Throne a machine which, if employed for that purpose, will be quite capable of accomplishing their complete removal from Chinese territory.

The Lien-Ping-Chu devoted many months to the study of its problem. It examined the most approved modern systems, and considered the manner in which foreign nations deal with their military establishments. Whatever it saw that was applicable to the necessities of the Chinese it took, no matter from whom it copied. There was only one test—was it the best that had been devised? At length a plan of organization was prepared covering every detail of a great army. This was embodied in an extended memorial to the Throne, and "received the favor of the imperial glance." In a former edict the Emperor and Empress Dowager proclaimed the memorial in its entirety as the fundamental military law of the empire.

"At present the times are very distressing, and the drilling of troops is of the utmost importance," said the edict, and the martial regeneration of China was officially undertaken.

This memorial-edict, a translation of which recently reached the writer from Peking, is the most exhaustive single piece of military legislation on record. It embraces practically the whole body of such law developed by Europe, America, and Japan. It is a document full of curious interest, with frequent quotation from the Chinese classics, and quaint citation of the wisdom of the sages, applicable, on many points, not merely to the Chinese, but equally as well to the powers they are setting out to imitate.

Value of Military Preparedness.

At the outset the Lien-Ping-Chu makes declaration of the value of preparedness for war.

"To-day in all notable foreign nations," it says, "the expense of maintaining armies is the greatest drain upon the revenues. Is it that all these rejoice in throwing away uncounted millions in order to make a parade of a valiant and martial multitude? No. It is because without armies there is nothing upon which to depend for the guarding of the nation and the protection of the people.

"Therefore it is said in the Hsuma-fa: 'Though all under Heaven may be at peace, if the art of war is forgotten there is peril.'"

The memorial-edict then announces the scheme of organization for the new army. It is practically that of the Japanese, with some minor changes to suit certain peculiar Chinese conditions. The army is to be composed of the men on active service, and first and second reserves. The fighting line consists of infantry, cavalry, artillery, and engineers, with the usual complement of Signal Corps, ordnance experts, medical staff, and service corps. Each of the eighteen provinces of the empire is to have, as a minimum, two divisions, each mustering something more than 12,000 combatants. This sets the minimum peace strength at thirty-six divisions. The Province of Chi-Li, where Yuan-Shih-Kai has the new system already in force, now has six divisions, and the Wu-Chang viceroyalty—composed of the Provinces of Hunan and Hupeh—is organizing an equal number. This will give an army of approximately half a million men on active duty. The full service period is fixed at ten years, three with the colors, three in the first reserve, and four in the second. The annual requirement will be 150,000 recruits, which, figured on a basis of 300,000,000 population for the eighteen provinces, will take about 10 per cent. of the men annually reaching the age of 21. The full operation of the system will provide about 1,500,000 trained men ready for service.

The technical organization is like that of the Japanese, except that companies muster only about half as many men. The division is composed of two brigades—four regiments—of infantry, with a regiment each of artillery and cavalry, and a battalion each of engineers and train. The regiment is formed on the three battalion plan, each battalion comprising four companies. Infantry and artillery regiments muster a few more than 1,200 combatants, cavalry about two-thirds that number. Batteries are formed on the six-gun basis. Regiments are officered as with us, except that there is no Lieutenant Colonel, and infantry and artillery companies have three Lieutenants instead of two. Until the new military schools shall have graduated a sufficient number of properly trained native officers, each battalion will have a foreign instructor, with another to supervise regimental drill and instruction, making four foreigners—at present all Japanese—for each regiment.

Line officers are to perform strictly line duties only, and there are numerous extra regimental and battalion officers for staff work. There are a number of officers, attachés, and servants entirely unknown to our organization, the long non-combatant list being headed by a "Chief of Retinue." To each battalion there is attached a "scribe," who, though not a combatant, is a commissioned officer. His duties correspond to those of our battalion Adjutants. Each company also has an extraordinary functionary called a "steward," whose duty it is to "have charge of the multitudinous affairs of the company."

Reverence for the Flag.

The Lien-Ping-Chu regards reverence for the flag as the index and certain sign of patriotism. It directs that the colors be used "for the purpose of awakening the martial spirit in the troops," and provides that the color-bearer shall be a commissioned officer.

"Upon the regimental flag shall depend the honor of the nation and the fame of the army," it says. "Therefore it shall be regarded as of supreme importance. The regiment shall be preserved or perish with its flag.

"In time of action it shall lead men to the charge, and whether they shall attack or stand upon the defense may be shown by the flag.

"When the flag arrives in camp all the force, from the commanding officer down, drawn up in military order, shall immediately receive and salute it. On all sacred festivals the officers and men shall draw up in rank, and face and salute the flag. If they meet it upon the road they shall stand at attention and salute. By this method loyalty may be inculcated."

Yuan-Shih-Kai does not believe in requiring his fighting men to perform the ordinary manual labor of which so much is necessary about garrison and camp.

"The business of the soldier in time of peace is to practice the drill, and in time of war to give battle to the enemy," says the Lien-Ping-Chu. "The various sorts of labor outside of this do not come within the sphere of his duties."

In carrying out this principle the Japanese system of gendarmerie has been adopted, largely relieving the troops of guard and police duty. A servant is provided for each squad of enlisted men, and on the march the battalion baggage is transported by specially employed drivers and stablemen. In the cavalry and artillery special grooms are employed to relieve the men of the care of their horses.

While our army struggles in vain to secure from Congress authority for proper organization of its medical staff, the Chinese board calmly assigns two surgeons to each battalion, with a regimental chief, seven in all for each regiment. And a nurse is provided for each company. Such liberal provision is based upon this argument:

"Whether the strength of the nation shall flourish or decay depends upon the army; whether the army be efficient or worthless depends upon the soldiers, and the strength or weakness of the soldiers depends upon medical and sanitary measures. If protective measures be not taken the losses in time of peace will exceed the slaughter of the battlefield."

Certain specific "protective measures" are then ordained. The drill is to be held with due consideration of the weather, so that there shall be no useless exposure of the men. "Quarters must be well ventilated and open"—an amazing reformation for the Chinese. "The clothing must be clean"—a requirement heretofore unheard of among the Celestial forces.

"If one affair is mismanaged, or one man comes to grief, it shall be regarded as involving the interests of the army."

Four evils are to be strictly guarded against on the march and in action—"injury from boots, from saddle, from cold, and from sunstroke."

In order to have the army thoroughly modern the commission has given to each division a band, officered by a Captain and one Lieutenant, and composed of two—only—"first-class" musicians, six of the "second class," thirteen of the "third class," and twenty-four "students." The proportion of "students" to "first-class musicians" in this organization shows what a fine appreciation the Lien-Ping-Chu has of the musical abilities of the Chinese.

Military Service to Be Respectable.

The problem of fixing upon an army system was easy compared with that of securing officers and men. Two great obstacles confronted the commission—the old, deep prejudice against military service and the universal "squeeze." To meet them the Lien-Ping-Chu has taken measures of decided cleverness and comprehension. To begin with, it determined to make the military service respectable. It recommended, and the Throne ordered, that army officers be assimilated to the class of Mandarins, and that the Princes, nobles, and officials of the empire send one or two of their sons to the military school for nobles at Peking.

Having thus provided that the officer shall be a gentleman, the Lien-Ping-Chu goes on to see that the enlisted man shall be of such responsibility as to make worth while the expenditure of time and effort and money necessary to form him into a good soldier. His first qualification is respectability. He must belong to a family of good repute and be able to make a statement of its members for three generations.

"The ranks are not to be filled up by chance. There shall be no reckless recommendation of wandering vagabonds or formerly discharged soldiers. Opium smokers, those who do not habitually attend to their duties, and those who have been before the courts shall not be accepted."

Enlistment is nominally voluntary, but the local authorities are charged with the duty of presenting a sufficient number of eligibles, and "severe punishment" is promised to those who fail to do so, or who "are influenced by bribes in their dealings with the register." To induce the desired men to enlist, a frank appeal to their cupidity is made, first through the adoption of a scale of pay of heretofore unknown liberality, and next through the provision of substantial benefits to the family of the recruit. The pay is fixed at 4½ taels per month in peace, with an additional tael for war service. (The tael is worth about 75 cents.) Of this one tael a month goes to the family, which also receives exemption of land tax on five acres. It is decreed that the families of soldiers "shall not be cheated or oppressed by local bullies or rowdies," and shall have the privilege of petitioning the Throne.

Practical Application of Publicity.

These are effective measures, taken with shrewd understanding of the characteristics of the people. Equally astute is the provision of the Lien-Ping-Chu to render it certain that the men and their families shall actually receive all that is due them from the paymaster. It is a practical application of the principle of publicity. The pay roll, showing the exact amount due the families of the men, is posted in public. A receipt must be publicly attached when the money is paid, with a certificate that there has been "not the least deduction." A special right of direct and immediate appeal is provided against any attempt of the paymaster to make private arrangement for a "squeeze."

The soldiers are paid openly on the drill ground, after parade, and all who care to may look on. The pay is in silver, which the Paymaster is required to weigh out in presence of the men, and the battalion officers must certify that there is "not the slightest shortage." Extreme severity of punishment is promised to any officer who undertakes to cheat a soldier or his family.

The scale of pay for officers is equally as liberal as that for men. For the higher ranks it is greater than ours, a corps commander receiving considerably more than the American Lieutenant General. The commission explains that it has adopted this liberality "for the purpose of fostering incorruptibility and fixing a basis of fact. Under the old regulations the salary of an officer was inconsiderable, but the perquisites from various sources often amounted to four or five times the regular pay."

So much care and thought for the rank and file naturally involves a corresponding thoroughness in the provisions for a corps of trained and educated officers. It was owing to the inefficiency and worthlessness of the officers of the old Banner forces, says the commission, that in former wars the Chinese armies "in the majority of cases were defeated and demoralized."

"Formerly officers were not required to possess education," it goes on, "but to-day those who are to give instruction in time of peace and to direct in time of action may not be rough and uninstructed men. The value of an army lies in the officer's personal efficiency. Valor and courage count for nothing without instruction."

Moreover, "the weapons of to-day are very deadly, and the destruction of life is very great." Therefore many officers must be trained, so that vacancies can be filled quickly, "for verily officers cannot be hastily prepared, on the spur of the moment."

In order to provide a sufficiently numerous corps of properly prepared officers the Lien-Ping-Chu considered three things essential:

First, to awaken a martial spirit and increase the prestige of the officers and the army.

Second, to better the financial condition of the officers.

Third, to give the officers a solid military education and broad general culture.

The measures taken to increase the prestige of the army by making the officers gentlemen and the men respectable, and to better its financial condition by liberal pay, have been described already. To aid in arousing the martial spirit throughout the empire the commission makes military education compulsory in the primary schools, on the theory that the drill and exercises in which the boys are required to take part will foster the development of the spirit desired.

The Reformation Radical.

Nothing more is required to show the radical character of the entire scheme of reformation than the mere statement of the third essential, for it involves the overthrow of the old system of education, which, from time immemorial has held that a thorough knowledge of the classics of the language was sufficient for the widest range of emergency. To accomplish it the Japanese system of military instruction has been copied exactly. A preparatory school is established for each province, with four middle schools, one military academy, and one staff college. There are also three special schools for noncommissioned officers. Candidates for commissions enter the military preparatory schools between the ages of 15 and 18. They must be of robust constitution, good bearing, and unimpeachable character, and they must not be only sons. The new military ardor is not yet sufficiently keen to disregard entirely the old Chinese consideration for the preservation of the family. Graduates of the three years' preparatory course go to one or other of the middle schools, where they receive a general training, with special courses in military science. From the middle school the candidate goes to the colors for six months. Then, if he meets the requirements, he goes to the military academy for a course of eighteen months in purely technical subjects. After graduation he must serve another six months with troops and pass a final examination before receiving his commission. This makes him a full-fledged officer at from 23 to 26 years of age. Candidates for the staff college are to be selected from among the most promising of the young officers who have served two years with their companies. To supply the full complement of officers for an army of thirty-six divisions will require an annual graduation of 1,500 men for twenty years. The plan does not contemplate filling the corps until 1933.

The Chinese reorganizers evidently do not contemplate many lapses from discipline, for their scheme contains but two references to law officers. One judge advocate is assigned to an army corps, "who shall investigate the laws and statutes for the entire corps." Each division also has one such officer, charged with "deciding upon all litigation for the entire division."

Contrary to the old Chinese practice of great severity, the commission has provided a mild scale of punishment.

"Self-respect is a thing greatly to be esteemed," it says, "and officers and men should cultivate the sense of shame. By a system of light punishments men may be led to respect themselves, and offenses will not be lightly committed."

Original Punishment for Desertion.

Desertion, however, is placed in a class by itself, and is treated by the Lien-Ping-Chu with an originality of view regarding the responsibility of officers which would make our service aghast. When a man "suddenly decamps" the headmen, elders, and tax-collectors of his district are required, on pain of "severe punishment," to aid the military authorities in effecting his capture. The heaviest responsibility is laid on the local Magistrate. If the man is not caught in a year, the Magistrate is fined nine months' pay, and as the number of deserters increases, and the time in which they are not recaptured extends, his punishment increases to the loss of two years' pay, degradation two steps in rank, and transfer to another district.

"But to get at the root of the matter," continues the commission, "the fault lies with the officers. If they habitually pacify and restrain and thus stimulate the military spirit, the men will be delighted to follow their leadership, and deserters will be very few. Therefore, by noting whether the number of deserters is large or small, one may determine whether the officer is good or bad. If the number of deserters is extraordinarily large, the company officers should be investigated, their faults put on record, and punishment administered."

Much stress is laid upon the instruction of the men, and a careful system of inspection is provided to see that the rules are faithfully carried out. "In the government of troops the first thing is instruction, the second is drill. Instruction is to develop the intelligence of the soldier and strengthen his character. Drill is to refine his skill and increase his ability and strength. When the officers know how to use their men, and the men know how to use their weapons, then the work is already more than half accomplished."

Expenses of the Army.

The expense of the new army received the careful attention of the commission, which submitted with its memorial detailed estimates of all the expenditures entailed by the system it proposed. For pay and allowances of an army corps—two divisions—the annual cost is figured at approximately 2,325,000 taels, or about $1,800,000. Besides this the commission estimates annual expenditures of 520,000 taels for fuel, tentage, clothing, and other supplies. On the basis of thirty-six divisions this will make the army budget about 51,250,000 taels annually for pay and maintenance of the troops and equipment. This is exclusive of expenditures on account of posts, construction of barracks and other buildings, arsenals, production of ordnance and ordnance supplies, and it does not take into consideration the matter of coast defenses, for which the Lien-Ping-Chu is preparing on a somewhat extensive scale. Nor is naval establishment considered as yet. All that is to come later. "Investigation and calculation must be made as opportunity arises," says the commission. It does provide, however, for three great arsenals, to be located inland, away from the possibility of attack by water, and where all equipment for the army is to be manufactured.

The commission decrees the adoption of uniform rifles and guns for all the forces, "the newest and most effective of all." The old baggy, gaudy uniform, that made the men plain targets at any distance is abandoned, and the modern, close-fitting style adopted—black wool for Winter and khaki for Summer. It plans comprehensively for barracks and other buildings, including gymnasiums and school buildings, hospitals and recreation halls. A special system of rewards for men in active service is devised, with a liberal scale of pensions and provision for retirement. Pay is also provided for the reserves as soon as the system has been in operation long enough for the reserve corps to be established. No detail seems to have been too small to merit and receive the studious attention of the commission.

Under the subject of "Orders," the Lien-Ping-Chu gives this comprehensive definition:

"The military order is that which fixes the goal to be attained, makes known the purpose, and brings every eye and ear under the control of a single will. It is said in the Book of Changes, 'The sweat rolls in issuing the great order!' In the Book of History it is written, 'The command is given to be carried out, and not to be recalled!'"

The Duty of Commanders.

Commanders must establish confidence in themselves, and the way to do so is "not to relax vigilance in the smallest matter of a smile or frown." Promises of reward or punishment must not be made recklessly, but, once made, must be fulfilled. In administering affairs the commander must be "as changeless as the four seasons;" in upholding the law, "as unwavering as the great mountains." He should "neither treat with scorn those beneath him, nor compromise and give heed to the general opinion." Thus those who receive his orders "will know that he is worthy of reliance, and will carry out the command with sincerity."

Announcing the scale of ages for compulsory retirement of officers, the commission expresses its adherence to the principle of "young men for war." "In military matters the thing most to be prized is youthful energy," it says, "that most to be dreaded the decrepitude of old age."

Thus the Lien-Ping-Chu has done its work. Under the active, energetic direction of Yuan-Shih-Kai the plan is rapidly being put into execution. In but a few years more China will be able to resist for herself such aggression as has recently threatened her continued existence as an empire. To the American at all familiar with conditions of life in China, with the weaknesses and faults of government there, and the widespread ramifications of corruption, with the prevailing contempt for military service, and the careless disregard of cleanliness and sanitary precautions characteristic of the whole nation, the memorial of the commission will be a source of unmixed wonder.

SUNLIGHT DECLARED THE ENEMY OF MAN

A New Theory of History Based on the Rivalry of the Brunette and the Blonde—Major Woodruff Attributes American Nervousness to Excessive Light.

"GOD'S sunlight' has had credit for more false merits than any other of the many superstitions to which men have fallen victim. We recognize the fact that it kills bacteria, but we ignorantly fail to reflect that it has just as fatal an effect on the protoplasm which composes the human system. 'God's sunlight' is producing neurasthenia and cardiac feebleness and anaemia, is promoting tuberculosis, and increasing insanity and suicide every day, not only in the tropics, but here in New York. 'God's cloudiness,' wherever it is found; the shade of dark houses and trees and awnings is promoting health, sanity, and long life. That is to say, in the case of those whose ancestral origin was in a land further north. The future of the Aryan people living in America, the children of the English, Irish, Dutch, Germans who founded the Republic, their very existence here, depends on their getting this 'God's sunshine' nonsense out of their heads.

"Most of the United States lies south of the latitude of Constantinople. Part of it is as far south as Nubia. New York is no further from the Equator than is Rome. The people of Southern Europe are flooding America—Armenians, Hungarians, Slavs, Jews, and Italians. The climate is precisely suited to them. They will flourish. The Scandinavians are too far south in Minnesota and are degenerating. The Englishman could not maintain himself in New England and has already been replaced by the Frenchman. It isn't a matter of heat at all, but of light. Unless he abandons this nonsense about 'God's sunshine,' and artificially provides himself with the defense against light, his dangerous enemy, the blonde man, who lacks the natural defenses against it evolved in centuries of existence on the shores of the Mediterranean, will perish."

A New Interpretation of History.
